Rules for Foreign Workers Explained

THREE weeks ago there was promulgated a decree governing the conditions under which, in future foreigners may work in Spain. This document, a summary of which was published in these columns, naturally left a number of points to be explained.

Many of the working people affected—and the decree affects every non-Spanish employe in the country—were not quite sure as to the exact procedure which they should follow. No further official pronouncement, beyond the decree and an Order issued by the Ministry of Labor, has been forthcoming to explain what must be done.

In an effort to clear up some of the points which were vague in the lay mind, the following article has been written for this paper by a well known Barcelona lawyer. It is the first of two which will interpret the law, and in this initial explanation the obligations of heads of businesses employing foreigners are set forth.

By Manuel Reñaga y Marqués

(Barrister-at-Law)

Although the decree of Sept. 8th regulates the work of foreigners in Spain, it will not come into force until ten days after its publication in the Official Gazette. However, as the Ministry of Labor on Sept. 12th issued a most important order in accordance with the decree, we shall treat of this Order in the present article.

After perusing it, and from a purely practical point of view, we make the following suggestions:

Every employer — corporation or private person — employing foreigners should remit to the Ministerio de Trabajo y Prevision Social in Madrid within twenty days from Sept. 16th (date following publication of the Order in the Gazette) a sworn declaration set forth in the following or similar terms:

«The undersigned (here insert name if a private person or the title of the company), complying with the requirements of the Order of Sept. 12th, 1932, dictated by the Ministerio de Trabajo y Prevision Social, swear (or affirm on my honor) that the situation in respect to the foreign workers in my employ (or in the service of this concern) referred to in the above mentioned order, is declared below in accordance with the requirements of the same.

(a) Surname and Christian names of the worker.

(b) Nationality.

(c) Locality in which the work is carried on.

Official Action for Better Roads

THE most hopeful step towards better roads in Mallorca — and indeed in all the Balearic Islands — was taken last week by the local and provincial authorities.

One of the chief drawbacks to improving the roads to meet the increasing traffic demands upon them has been the fact that appropriations for all main roads must come from Madrid, and every highway project approved in the capital. The Diputación and the Ayuntamiento are joining hands to take over the management of this department, and they are petitioning the central government to give them the necessary authority.

The granting of the home rule Estatuto to Cataluña has, no doubt, inspired other provinces to an attempt to take over more of their own affairs.

In this instance, although good roads are an essential of continued tourist traffic in Mallorca, the local authorities are animated more by consideration for residents and taxpayers than by a desire to smooth the path for the visitor. After all, they argue, Mallorquins pay the automobile taxes and ought to get a return in the way of passable roads.

The meeting of the Diputacion (the provincial governing body) during the week decided that the proper authorities to handle the highways were those on the spot. Under the plan worked out, the Diputacion and the Ayuntamientos of the various towns in the Islands would co-operate in the administration of road funds.

Money collected in the province for roads, would be spent in the province. The system would cut out all the delay and red tape which is unavoidable when every question must be referred to Madrid for settlement.

Furthermore, it is hoped that if the local officials were responsible for the condition of the main thoroughfares, the job would be done more thoroughly and perhaps more money might be forthcoming.

Madrid is very far away, and the officials there are by no means as accessible to complaint as local officials. Furthermore, they are, by the very nature of their positions, comparatively indifferent to the needs of any one province. The experience of other countries has shown that this is the sort of thing that is best done by local government.

Good roads are, perhaps, the improvement most needed in Mallorca from the tourist point of view, for they would lead to such other advantages as country clubs, golf courses, etc., which are not built partly because there would be no good way to get to them.

Spanish Art Taking

New York by Storm

WHILE American tourists are crowding to Spain, Spanish culture and Spanish scholarship are invading the United States in even greater volume. It is an open question which is cause and which is effect, but both developments are marked.

New York, for example, has become the greatest centre that the New World can boast for the study of Spanish literature, art, history and science. Not one of the Spanish-American countries does as much.

Spanish artists are winning enormous popularity in the country. Spanish dancers have always been drawing cards, and Escudero and La Argentina are worthy successors of a long line of stars. But now theatre goers are applauding the works of Spanish dramatists. The classic Spanish company of Diaz-Mendoza had a great success; the works of Benavente and Martinez Sierra were greatly appreciated by New York audiences during the last season.

The commercial art galleries have found that almost no one attracts the crowds so surely as the Spanish painters. Sert, who did the murals of the new Waldorf Astoria Hotel, was acclaimed a modern master, and the Hispanic Museum reports that there are always crowds around the sun-drenched Valencian frescoes of Sorolla.

Spanish music is heard in every concert hall, and that of Balthasar Samper, the Mallorquin composer, not the least. Iturbe, the pianist, is always sure of a full house, the guitarists like Segovia get enthusiastic reviews.

Perhaps most typical of American interest in Spain is the variety of courses in Spanish studies offered by Columbia University, the largest institution of higher learning in the country and drawing students from every state in the Union. Lectures are scheduled for the term just opened on all branches of Spanish literature, art, etc.

The number of Spaniards in the city cannot account for this development. There are about 30,000 of them, mostly laborers, but they are coming in for their fair share of notice. New Yorkers are finding that the Spanish colony on the lower West Side can provide very entertaining little Spanish restaurants, Spanish guitarists and dancers, and the Spaniards are meticulous in observing the fiestas of their own land.

Inspired by the success of the Palma Theatre Guild, a group of Germans interested in the theatre are organizing a similar venture which they hope will, in time, work in conjunction with the Anglo-Americans. Mrs. Alice Rohde, who has played in the Royal Theatre in Munich, and has also appeared in Berlin and Vienna but who is at present living at the Pension Hiller in Terreno, is at the head of this movement.

In looking over the lay of the land, she has already encountered her first difficulty for, she says, while she has found several German actresses of reputation living on the Island and eager to participate in such a movement, there seems to be a dearth of male thespians in Mallorca who speak the Teutonic tongue.

The German Consul, Mr. Juan Dede, when approached by Mrs. Rohde, was very enthusiastic about the idea of a German Theatre Guild in Mallorca for the size of that colony warrants such activity; and the organizers are taking up the matter in a serious way with their compatriots and are planning to call a meeting within the next week.

OF PERSONAL INTEREST

Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Acland Johnson have left the Calle Gomila in Terreno where they have been living for the last three months, and will move to the Calle de los Baños. They intend to put in their time before settling in their new house on a walking tour along the Estallench-Bañalbufar road.

Mr. Johnson, who is an Australian, has a very keen interest in dogs and has acquired a bulldog of the type found only in Mallorca. He claims that it is very similar to the bulldogs seen in the early nineteenth century prints of English bull baiting, and is doing some research into the origin of these animals. The old English bulldog, says Mr. Johnson, was bred from the Bordeaux mastiff especially for bull baiting, and he is now attempting to trace the Mallorquin dog from that source. His theory is that it was introduced into Mallorca when the English came to this part of the world in the eighteenth century. The similarity between the two breeds cannot be denied.

The Baroness Hiller von Gaertringen has selected Mallorca for a sojourn in the Mediterranean, and will live in the Villa Nueva, San Agustin, during her stay on the Island. According to her present plans she will stay two months.

The portrait painter, Mr. A. Sheldon Pennoyer, who occupied the Villa Nueva with his brother and sister-in-law, is now making his home at Son Vent, the Anglo-American guest house in Porto-Pi.

Mr. and Mrs. George Galt have closed their summer place in Cala Ratjada and have returned to their house in Porto-Pi.

Commander Alan Hillgarth and the Hon. Mrs. Hillgarth are returning to Mallorca for another winter. They will live in Biniatjar this year.

Miss Lucile Luttrell, who has guided the destiny of the subscription department of the New York Theatre Guild for the last ten years, left the strenuous life of the theatre last month for a holiday in the Mediterranean. She has been cruising around the Inland Sea on the Exeter, and last week put in at Palma where she expects to spend the rest of her vacation.

Because of the interest the American Press took in the Palma Theatre Guild upon its inauguration last Spring, Miss Luttrell was well acquainted with the activities of that organization before she arrived on the Island.

Mrs. J. W. Ballard and her family are moving into Can Singala in Bonanova for the winter. They have been stopping at the Hotel Bristol since their arrival.

The British Broadcasting Corporation is well represented on the Island this week. Mr. Lawrence Gillian who is connected with the literary department of that institution, is touring Mallorca on foot; and Mr. M. E. Clarke who is interested in the music that is broadcast from headquarters, is also here. His visit is more or less in an official capacity.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman Jacobsen have officially moved into their new studio apartment in the Calle Bosch and are living in the midst of masons, plumbers and electricians who are carrying out exten-

The Little Club opposite the Cine Rialto has now more than 100 members, although it is not yet officially open. Harry Fawkes, the secretary, and Fred Marvil, treasurer, are busy directing the finishing touches, which include decorations by Erwin Hubert and a particularly heartbreaking art exhibit of a small dog in distress. The Club, which is the first in Palma for the foreign colony, has a membership mostly drawn from the English and Americans on the Island. Temporary cards are now ready.

Mr. Pablo Theis, proprietor of the International Library, left for Barcelona last (Saturday) night where he will establish his headquarters. He says that by being there, he can have London papers delivered to clients in Palma within forty-eight hours of their publication instead of three days.

Military Manoeuvres

The unusual numbers of troops that you may have seen marching and countermarching about the countryside, most of them in districts where few soldiers are usually seen, was no sign of revolution or riot.

The annual military manoeuvres are held at this time of year, and the various contingents of the Mallorca garrison play at war games. The manoeuvres are being carried out in the neighborhood of Santanyi, La Puebla, Pollensa, Son Bonet, etc. Artillery, cavalry and infantry are included.

Tennis Tournament

Tennis Champion Gray has given a cup for which competition started on the courts of the Mallorca Lawn Tennis Club yesterday (Saturday). It is a handicap doubles tournament, partners being selected by draw. Mr. Gray, who is leaving shortly after eight months here, is giving the cup in appreciation of the courtesies and kindnesses shown him at the Club.

Tourist Manners

Under the title «More Civility, Señores Tourists!» the Correos de Mallorca, local Catholic organ, suggested that it might be well for visitors to the Island to consider more the susceptibilities of the local citizens. While explaining that its remarks apply to only a small minority, the paper expresses strongly its disapproval of the negligent dress in which many visitors walk the streets of Palma, and especially of those who visit the Cathedral in sleeveless costumes and alpargatos.

Sports Festival Today

The sports festival for the benefit of the radium drive will be held today. The principal events will be football matches which begin at 2:30 p.m. and a walking contest around Palma which will end at the football grounds between games.

VARIETY IN THE NEW MODE

By Jean Charles Worth

(The designer and creator of the famous House of Worth. Written specially for THE MAJORCA SUN.)

WHILE, perhaps, Dictators in Political Life are having things their own way, Dictators in Fashion are as much out of style as the crinoline. Paris creators may offer suggestions and ideas, and these innovations are accepted or rejected by their clients. Those which are accepted by the smart women of the world become the mode. In other words, Man proposes and Woman disposes!

In this year of grace and confusion, variety is the keynote of the mode — if you understand what I mean. There is no set style. One cannot say dictatorially, skirts are longer, the waist line is placed here, and sleeves are thus and so, for, while in general the silhouette has not changed a great deal and remains slender and straight, there is an infinite variety in skirt lengths, sleeves, waistlines, and type of frock, so that each woman today may choose the type of gown which best suits her personality and still be in fashion.

Paris designers have not only drawn on their imaginations for the interpretations of costumes designed for the social life and usages of today — which is the raison d'être for changes in the mode — but also on past periods which have left their imprint on fashion, such as the Directoire, Empire and Moyen Age.

Let us first consider the evening gowns of this season because evening gowns always show the first changes in the mode. Since there are fewer occasions for the formal evening gown, most of the Paris couturiers have shown but few models, and these are varied in style and fabric. Worth, for example, shows a brown evening gown of the new crinkly velvet which is so woven that the crinkles do not disappear on wearing, which has a princess silhouette, following the lines of the figure with a fairly high waistline suggested by the draping of the bodice, cut square in the front, deep under the arms, and to a V in the back reaching to the waist. A narrow band of sable starts at the shoulders and follows the outline of the back décolleté. The skirt is cut in an intricate way to follow the lines of the figure and yet give plenty of fullness around the hem, especially in the back which has a slight train. A waist-length jacket with wide shirred sleeves completes this costume, which has already proved a tremendous success with professional buyers and private clients.

Another formal type of evening gown is developed in the new magenta shade of crepe romain. It has a shirred ruching some two or three inches deep around the décolleté, a green velvet belt embroidered in silver and diamanté, and the skirt fullness begins just a few inches below the waist — a change from the silhouette which followed the figure to the knees.

The Directoire influence can be traced in a number of formal evening coats, most of them reaching to a few inches of the ground, to let the bottom of the dress show beneath. These fit the figure snugly, have a cape effect on the shoulders, and are trimmed with blue or silver fox, sable or other luxurious furs.

Since there is a greater demand for the «little» evening frock — the informal gown which can be worn for small dinners, dances, theatre, etc. — most Paris creators have specialized on these. They may be in black chiffon relieved by a touch of white in the belt or a shoulder ornament, dark blue marquise or net, crepes in various new crinkly weaves and in a variety of colors including bottle green, dregs of wine shades, or in fuchsia or purples; or in the new and very lovely velvets. Skirts may be instep length or just clear the floor. Belts are placed just below the bust as in the Empire robe, with the natural waistline emphasized by the fit of the bodice, or may rest on the hip after the Moyen Age. The skirts are usually full but so cut as to keep the silhouette slender. Wide sashes of velvet, with long ends hanging down the back of the skirt, are often used with these frocks in a color contrasting the color of the frock. A black crepe frock with a Princess silhouette has emerald green velvet ribbon, six inches wide, forming reverses in the front and following the line of the décolletage with a big bow and long ends hanging down the back of the skirt; a blue marquise frock has a crushed belt of ciré cherry red satin and a deep purple chiffon frock is trimmed with fuchsia.

The «adaptable» frock, which can be worn late in the afternoon, and then by the removal of jacket or bolero, forms a sleeveless gown with low décolleté, has also claimed much attention this season; and these come in a tremendous variety of form and fabric.

Sports clothes have changed little, except in detail. Skirts are a few inches longer, waistline clearly defined, and sleeves different in many ways. Light weight woolens, mohairs, new water proof velvet in exclusive colors of red and beige are the materials used.

Most of the interest in the new daytime clothes is concentrated in the sleeves. Some of these are cut out at the top of the arm, others are full between shoulder and elbow and worked in a new open-work embroidery on the shoulder, others have diagonal tucks between elbow and wrist, while again, some are simple and straight, fitting the arm from shoulder to wrist. Usually, however, a great deal of hand-work, such as this new open-work embroidery forming a sort of lace effect, faggotting, tucks, etc. is used.

Coats may be waist length or hip length jackets; three-quarter or five-eighths, showing a bit of the skirt below; or full length. Some have belts; others have the waistline defined by a series of short vertical tucks or by definite cut. Fur may be used as a trimming or not. Scarf collars are popular, as well as small standing collars which are snug around the throat. Sleeves are varied in many ways, with fur cuffs anywhere between the armhole and wrist. Dregs of wine, burgundy, browns, dark greens, blues, and the perennial black are featured.

Another New School

A school under German direction will shortly open in Son Alegre for children of all ages. The strong point of the new institution will be languages, instruction being given in Spanish, German, French and English.

The head of the school is Doctor Foerster, who is well known in Terreno as a professor of languages.

One of the features of the school will be a kindergarten, for children from four to six years old. There will be classes for all, however, and students will be prepared for entrance into secondary schools and universities.

Mathematics, history, natural sciences, physics and chemistry will be taught, and stress will be laid upon sports. Primarily designed for German children here, the school will welcome those of all nationalities, boarders as well as day scholars.

The Week in Spain

Contrary to many expectations the three day celebrations, from Sunday to Tuesday in connection with the presentation of the Estatuto to people of Cataluña, passed off in comparative quiet. Except the reception given to the ministers from Madrid on their arrival at the Estación de Francia, and the crowd which lined the streets on their way to the Palace of the Generalidad and afterwards the great crowd which received them there, there was comparatively little animation in the other parts of the city on Sunday, and none at all on the other two days. Of course the public and private buildings were gaily bedecked with flags and banners while the ministers were in residence, but much more public animation and signs of jubilation were expected. Probably the fact that it was so long on the tapis before its promulgation, and that the Catalans looked upon its coming into force as an accomplished fact long before it was presented to them, took from it the glamour and excitement with which its presentation would otherwise be accompanied. It was received with nothing like the same animation which accompanied the proclamation of the Republic nearly a year and a half ago now.

Arrangements are already being made for the future elections for the Catalan Parliament. The various parties are actively preparing schemes for propaganda, quietly, and are awaiting the results of the conference which is to be held in the Palace of the Generalidad to-day or to-morrow.

In The Casa de Cataluña in Madrid a reception was celebrated last night for the purpose of celebrating the approbation of the Estatuto. There was a general invitation for all Catalans living in the capital, and many important political personages were present.

The syndicate of customs agents at Cerbere have given out a report contradicting in part statements that the quotas for Spanish fruit and vegetables had been increased. The Paris customs authorities have given the following figures concerning the quotas allowed in during the month of August:

Fruit: Quota authorized, 39,450 Cwt.; amount imported, 40,325. Vegetables: Quota authorized, 1,500; amount imported, 1,365. There is a legal margin of 10 per cent, which was not taken advantage of.

The Minister of Agriculture passed through the station of Cerbere the other day and the Alcalde called upon him to show a letter from the French Minister saying that if French interests by Port Bou were seriously affected, the French Government would intervene. No arrangements for October have been made. It is clear, however, that the exportation figures for 1928-31 will be taken as a base.

From now on all taxicab drivers in Madrid will have a free day each week, in accordance with a new municipal order. No drivers, however, will be off on Saturdays or Sundays, when business is heaviest, and the day of rest for each will be fixed by the traffic section of the Ayuntamiento.

The trouble with Aparceros and Rabassaires still continues in various parts of Spain, and probably will continue till the agrarian reform is a reality.

About Barcelona

Mr. Newbury, Sub-Manager of the Anglo South American Bank, is bringing his wife and family from Caldeias on the tenth of this month to their new home, Villa Eulalia, Calle Dr. Roux, Tres Torres. They hope that their house warming party will be to «meet» Mr. Woodburn (who is coming from Valencia to act as Assistant Manager of the Bank) and Mrs. Woodburn.

Among the passengers on board the Canadian Pacific Liner Montcalm which spent last Friday in Barcelona harbour, was Miss Annie O'Brien who is very well known in this city. She gave a cocktail party which «degenerated» into a Guinness party to some of her friends, among whom were Dr. Dillon, the author, with Mrs. and Miss Dillon; Mrs. Frank Newbery, Mrs. Teddy Garcia with her boy Toby, Mrs. Macanelly, wife of the American Consul, and her daughter Mary; Miss Donnelly with a delightful baby niece, Mr. Johnson, Sr. Batista and Captain Jack Harvey.

Most of them stayed to enjoy such things as cold roast beef, curried vegetables and Worthington, whilst listening to the ship's admirable band.

Miss Jean C. Bell, grand niece of Alexander Graham Bell, inventor of the telephone, arrived on Tuesday morning from Mallorca.

Last week Mr. J. Bosch of the Spanish Tourist Service in London was in Barcelona. Mr. Bosch had been in Mallorca for a few days on business and stopped over here for the celebrations last Sunday. He has returned to England.

Mr. Roy Noole and Mr. Martin Glidewell have returned from a short holiday in the Pyrenees.

Mr. Harry Foster will move out to San Cugat shortly.

We understand that Mrs. Whitmore, who underwent an operation for appendicitis, is making satisfactory progress and may now be considered as out of danger.

Don Juan Villangomez, who is well known in the English speaking colony, has now recovered from his ear trouble.

Mr. and Mrs. Curtis are now back in Barcelona.

Britishers Rescue Girl

On Monday morning a small party of Britishers, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Cotton, Mr. and Mrs. Millar, Mr. and Mrs. Wiseman and the children of the three couples, who were spending the forenoon on the beach at Sitges, saw that a young woman swimmer was unable to get to the shore because of the heavy under-tow.

Mr. Cotton, followed by his wife and another member of the party, immediately swam out to her, and, although none of them were in training for such a feat, managed to save the girl's life. It was a struggle, for the heavy surf greatly handicapped the swimmers and the young woman was fighting hysterically against them.

Valencia Notes

By Our Correspondent

(Calle de Lauria, 20, Valencia)

The advent of THE SPANISH TIMES into Valencia has been, so far, a great success, all the readers enjoyed it immensely, I happen to know this because both of them told me so!!!

It is certainly with mixed feelings that we congratulate Mr. James Woodburn on his appointment to the Anglo South American Bank at Barcelona. The colony here is not so large that we can say good bye to a member of eight years standing without regret; however there is a compensating balance in the scheme of things, I am sure, and we extend a cordial welcome to his successor, Mr. F. Gentry. A few intimate friends gave a farewell dinner in the Palace Hotel to Mr. Woodburn and his wife.

During the week Mr. and Mrs. Harker and Mr. F. Harker returned from England where they have been spending the summer with their daughter. Our Diocesan Reader is also back and in harness—I shaw the dust behind him t'other day as he was rushing off to see a sick British Sailor in Hospital. In this connection, Divine Service will commence on the 2nd Sunday in Oct. in the Church Room in Ciscar, 10.

Exposition for Valencia

At a meeting held in the Valencia Ayuntamiento, which was attended by the President of the Diputacion and the Alcalde, the possibility of organizing an internal exposition to be held here in 1935 was discussed. For political reasons there were not a sufficient number of representatives present to reach a decision. The Socialists and the Radical Socialists refused to attend.

The author of the project, Señor Villalba, presented to the meeting a few details of the expense such an undertaking would incur. He said that it would be necessary for the State to vote about 50,000,000 Pesetas.

A counsellor present attempted to give the project a political aspect, but the President of the Diputacion put forward as the major reason for holding an international exposition in Valencia, the interests of the nation. He stressed the necessity for keeping politics in the background.

After speeches from the various representatives, it was decided to obtain the views of the commercial community as to the feasibility and usefulness of the project.

London Club Theatricals

The London Club is presenting two plays on Oct. 29th at the Parthenon Theatre. One will be in English from Miss Gertrude Jennings's book entitled «Five Birds in a Cage», and the other in Catalan promises to be very amusing.

The London Club is probably the only one of its kind for the promotion of the study of the English language among Spaniards.

The Parthenon Theatre has recently been altered and re-decorated and is now quite an up-to-date theatre.

Special Film Show

On Friday, Oct. 14th at 10 p.m. there will be one special performance under the auspices of the Catalán paper, Mirador, of Noies en Uniforme, the film which has been so successful in London and Paris. Tickets may be booked at the Mirador offices or at the Cine Fantasio.

The Mirador for several years has given special monthly film shows in the winter months, showing pictures which, while artistically excellent, would not be box-office successes. The majority of the films belong to the Avant-garde class.

Rules for Foreign Workers

- (d) Profession or trade.
- (e) Category.
- (f) Date of contract.
- (g) Duration of contract.
- (h) Salary or wage.
- (i) Observations.
- (j) Signature.

Under the heading (d) it should be stated whether the employe is a laborer, technical man or office clerk. Under (e) the category and professional qualifications of the worker must be given. If no written contract exists (f), the date on which the employe commenced work must appear and under (i) any other data which, in the opinion of the employer, ought to figure in the Register of Foreign Workers which is to be made up. In this column, therefore, if a director or manager is personally responsible for the operations of the concern, this should be stated. Further in this space must appear whether the worker enjoys extra-territorial privileges, and whether he has come to Spain to study in some official or private educational centre, literary or scientific or industrial. Here, too, it must be stated whether the employe is a temporary worker.

For the purposes of this Order a foreign worker is anyone more than fifteen, neither born nor naturalized in Spain, who carries on any trade or occupation, salaried, manual or technical, artistic or pedagogic, directive or executive, whatever may be the form or amount of the remuneration received.

It is important to notice that the Generalidad of Cataluña has asked the Government of the Republic to authorize them to issue the workers identity cards in Cataluña. This may result in the publication at the beginning of next month of new complementary legal regulations.

(The next article by Señor Reñaga, which will explain the employe's obligations will appear in an early issue.)

President to Visit Barcelona Soon

It is rumoured in the Palace of the Generalidad that within the next fortnight the President of the Republic, Niceto Alcalá Zamora, will pay a visit to Barcelona on the invitation of Señor Maciá. During his stay he will be the guest of the President of the Generalidad.

During his visit in Barcelona, it is probable that Señor Alcalá Zamora will make a number of excursions to other parts of Cataluña.

Where Barcelona History Was Made

TUCKED off in a quiet little street around which the roar of the city whirls but never penetrates, three weatherbeaten but still sturdily graceful columns rise upwards towards a roof which has been gone for centuries. They are covered now only by a skylight, and they have watched Barcelona grow for nearly two thousand years.

The three columns once formed part of the Roman temple, which so far as size is concerned must have been one of the greatest in the Empire. For these three columns are contained within the building in Calle Paradis 10 which houses the Centro Excursionista de Cataluña, while as far away as the Plaza del Rey stands the only other surviving column of the Temple, even more weather worn and battered than the three now within doors.

The Temple once covered all the intervening ground and this section was the centre of Roman official life in Barcelona. It has remained so ever since.

In the Plaza del Rey, Barcelona's history has been made and remade through busy centuries when the Roman Temple was a crumbled and forgotten ruin.

Entering the historic ground from the Plaza Santa Ana, the block of buildings straight ahead was the residence of the Counts of Barcelona, even after they had become Kings of Aragón and united Spain. On its steps, the life of Ferdinand the Catholic was attempted in 1492.

It is now occupied by the nuns of St. Clare. King Philip V gave it to their community when the convent in Barrio Ribera was pulled down.

At the left of the former royal palace, is a Gothic building which was the residence of the viceroys. It now contains the archives of the Kingdom of Aragón, complete as far back as the reign of Don Pedro. Here there are always students searching into the inexhaustible mine of the past for new light on the development of Spain.

At the right of the palace is a structure which the Counts of Barcelona knew as the Chapel of St. Agueda. It was for centuries the royal chapel, but in 1844 the authorities decided to abolish it to make room for more modern buildings. The Academia de Buenas Letras intervened in time to save it and transformed the old chapel into an archeological museum, which it still remains.

The Ayuntamiento of Barcelona has been engaged in the work of restoring the buildings at the sides of the Plaza for some time. There exists, as part of this programme, a plan to turn the former palace into a museum.

Near the Chapel of St. Agueda, the old buildings were years ago replaced by some modern houses. These in their turn have been destroyed.

However, in this instance there has been a check to the usual cycle of destruction of the old to make way for the new and of the new to make way for the newer. The comparatively recent structures will not be replaced by the architecture of day after tomorrow. Instead the site will revert to antiquity.

Thanks to the efforts of the Conde de Guell, an ancient building will join the other edifices of the past in the Plaza del Rey. It is the Casa Padellas, a splendid old Gothic house, which the Ayuntamiento is transferring from its present position in the Calle de Mercadores.

It is fitting that the archives of Aragón should be enshrined in a building on the Plaza del Rey, for no other spot in the city is so closely connected with the entire history of Barcelona from the days when Roman colonists marched in procession to the Temple up to the present ceremonies in honour of the Estatuto.

Perhaps no better site for a museum in which could be displayed the past of Barcelona is to be found than the old royal palace, which has seen so much of this past.

Some of the most interesting relics of the Roman period have been unearthed in excavating for the various buildings which have been built in this neighbourhood. Some of them are preserved with the three columns of the Temple in the quarters of the Centro Excursionista de Cataluña.

This building is itself an old and interesting structure with wide arches leading into a very mediaeval-looking patio and the few but important relics of antiquity within.

The three columns of the temple are, perhaps, not as well known as they deserve to be, for despite the fact that it is located in the heart of the city, the Calle Paradis is nearly as hard to find as paradise itself. It is a crooked little street, so carefully hidden that shopkeepers and guardias around the corner from it are not quite sure where it is located.

PROMOTING GOLF IN SPAIN

By Norman Cinnamond

GOLF has become the pre-eminent sport abroad, and the publicity which it receives relates not only to the game and the players but to the places where it is played. Hotels and business in general share in the benefit.

The French, masters in the art of attracting tourists, have advertised the excellencies of their golf links, for they know golf is a great attraction. Unfortunately, in Spain the value of the sport as a means of drawing tourists and its importance in modern life are not so well understood. This is a pity, for Spain is one of the countries best adapted by climate and variety of country for golf, and tourist trade in general. It was too bad that the golf course begun in Malaga was stopped for lack of funds after the sum allotted by the Patronato Nacional del Turismo was exhausted.

Catalans are now the best players in Spain, simply because they have more courses upon which to practise. However, the courses are none of them of the type that will produce great players and make Spain known in the world of golf as Spaniards are known in tennis, swimming, football, etc.

Barcelona needs not only a good course where the first class tournaments could be held, but a modern country club such as those of Ranelagh, Hurlingham and Wimbledon where many sports can be played.

Madrid has two such clubs, the Puerta de Hierro and the Club del Campo. The latter cost more than a million pesetas. In this sum was included the expense of an eighteen hole golf course, a polo field, hockey field, squash racquets courts, twelve tennis courts, clubhouse, caddie-house, etc. The quality of the soil, the varied vegetation and the undulating ground have resulted in an excellent course. The other sports are as well taken care of, and the buildings are beautiful.

It was made possible only because some eight months before it was begun and much longer before the opening, the Club could count more than 1,000 members who had paid in about half a million pesetas.

The desirability of such an undertaking near Barcelona is realized, and various projects are being studied in the hills of Montseny, the plain of Saradña, the fields of Prat, in which last named place a landowner will give the necessary land free on the understanding that it is not used for profit. Other projects are based on exploitation of surrounding land by the building of villas, as is so much the vogue in England. In this class is the plan of Sabadell, which it is hoped to make the «Hollywood» of Cataluña. Lastly, there is the project in Gavá, the work of a young Barcelona architect with entirely modern ideas. There would be a golf course of eighteen holes, built along the sea, a superb clubhouse, villas, hotel, etc. This beach might well, if the plans are realized, become a formidable rival of the Lido.

The existing nine hole course at Terramar, Sitges, is played upon all the year round. It has a number of annual tournaments and as Sitges increases in popularity and the new hotel is built another nine holes will be added. Then perhaps the present hotel will be turned into an actual country club.

The course at Puigcerdá is the only natural golf course in Spain. There is abundant water, fertile ground and undulating country. There are blind holes, holes on hills and in valleys. On this type of course first class golf is possible, for a natural course is preferable to the artificial type.

Golf could be played perfectly in such a place as S'Agaró, and there are other places along the Costa Brava which are as beautiful and fit for the game as the coast of France with the only difference that they have exploited their opportunities and we have not.

Madrid Report

on the current news from our correspondent in the Capital.

Madrid to Manila

VERY little mention has been made in the Press of the intrepid flight by Don Fernando Rein Loring in a monoplane from Madrid to Manila. It was however, a wonderful exploit and the route followed, in many parts completely off the unbeaten track, is attended with probably greater personal risks than any other.

Señor Rein Loring has now been back in Madrid several weeks, and we have had the opportunity of obtaining from this diffident hero some details of his flight, which was one long struggle against adverse weather conditions over a part of the world where good weather is a very important factor to success, the facilities for landing and refitting being few and far between.

From Madrid to Jodpur all went according to plan and 9,000 kilometres were covered in 11 days. From Jodpur onwards to Rangoon, Bangkok, Hanoi, Hong-Kong and Manila the airman had to contend against strong monsoons, heavy rains and mist, which eventually caused a serious leakage to his petrol tanks.

At Bangkok his troubles seriously began, and a terrible typhoon prevented him going south to Saigon. He, therefore, decided to cross the range of mountains into Annam and to proceed to Hanoi.

These mountains, though only some 8,000 feet high, are during the monsoons impassable 80 days out of 100. The airman made one attempt but had to return, and five days ensued before the heavy mists allowed him to cross these mountains, covered with dense forests. A forced landing in this jungle, abounding with tigers and reptiles would mean almost certain death.

After a day spent in Hanoi, where he received from the French Officials of French Indo-China the greatest kindness and help, he started for Hong-Kong, but, after contending against a hurricane, he was obliged to make a forced landing at Moncoy, where he stayed two days.

Starting again for Hong-Kong, heavy wind and rain were encountered, and after two hours flight his right petrol tank began to leak. As he was flying over a part of China where pirates abound, he aimed for French territory, and after 3 hours flight landed in Taiping.

Great difficulty was experienced there in getting the tank soldered. Within 50 minutes of his next start, the leak recommenced to such an extent that his petrol was exhausted in 20 minutes. The petrol gushed out over his face and was pouring copiously into the fuselage. To avoid being asphyxiated, the airman put a handkerchief into his mouth, which was immediately saturated with petrol. In the nick of time he managed to make a forced landing in the small fort of Bayard. For 3 days he suffered from the effects of the petrol he had swallowed. He then returned to Taiping, obtained more petrol and covered the 450 kilometres to Hong-Kong in 2 hours and 50 minutes. From Hong-Kong Señor Loring was anxious to break the long run of close on 1,000 kilometres to Manila by landing to obtain some petrol at the military airdrome on Formosa. All diplomatic efforts by the Spanish authorities at Tokio were, however, unavailing.

Finally, he left Hong-Kong for Manila, carrying 380 litres of petrol. After a flight of 9 hours and 10 minutes he arrived at Aparri in the Philippines and upon landing the motor stopped of its own accord, as the 14 litres of petrol remaining in the supplementary tanks did not reach the carburetor owing to the slope on the plane. This is the second time that an airplane has crossed the China Sea from the coasts of Asia to the Philippines, the pilots in both cases being Spaniards.

THE BULWARK OF CIVIL AUTHORITY

AFTER the coup d'etat of 1854 when the country found it could not do without the Guardia Civil, the reputation of the corps was established. It has maintained itself in its high position in public respect by never resting on its laurels.

Through innumerable changes of government and even of the form of government, it has remained, with one notable exception, the firm supporter of existing authority.

While Spain was growing poorer and more disorganized towards the end of the last century, the land seemed ripe for the adoption of revolutionary ideas. The fact that socialism, communism, anarchism and syndicalism made much less headway in the country than might have been expected from the material with which propagandists could work was largely due to the Guardia Civil.

At no time were the agitators permitted to organize the dissatisfied section of the population. In the general political confusion and the weakness of inefficient governments, the corps remained inflexibly severe. The rulers of the country were of the type under whom revolution thrives, but the Guardia Civil kept to their traditions, and suppressed any rising from below.

When repressive measures could not entirely subdue the dissatisfaction, and there were outbursts of bombings and rioting, the Guardia Civil was always on hand to confine the trouble to sporadic affairs. Their custom of riding down a riotous mob, shooting as they came and no questions asked, made them greatly feared, and few crowds were ever belligerent enough to stand up against them.

But the corps distinguished itself in other fields. It was an important part of the army which General O'Donnell led to exceptional victories in Africa in 1869, one of the most glorious campaigns in Spain's centuries of warfare in Morocco. The Guardias attached to the army had the task of storming towns by day and then, while the rest of the troops rested, they proceeded to police the captured place in their usual efficient manner.

They came back from Africa with the experience of desert fighting and the hats which are still a part of their uniform, and which were retained in honor of the distinction they had earned in Africa. The flaps which are here worn permanently turned up were designed to drop down in the heat of day to protect the back of the neck and the face from the sun.

It was a year later that they made their biggest contribution to political change. When the first republic fell in favor of the restored monarchy, the peacefulness of the movement was due to the fact that the Guardia Civil joined the army against the existing regime. Their part on this occasion was more active than in the foundation of the Second Republic. In April, 1931, their commander simply let it be known that his corps would not support the King. Nothing more was required of them. But the end of the First Republic came when a Colonel of the Guardia Civil dissolved the Cortes by force of arms, declaring that the government was leading the country into anarchy.

The deputies of the Cortes seemed at first inclined to resist. When the Colonel informed them they were dissolved, there were cries of «Kill this Colonel!» in the hall, but three or four shots fired into the roof restored silence, and the deputies filed peacefully out.

The corps is of course a career, and it cannot be started too young. Admission to the Guardia Civil is eagerly sought, since the prestige is great, the pay good and after full service the individual is retired on 85 per cent. of his active pay.

Many of them come from the colleges which the corps itself maintains. These were designed for the orphans of guardias, but now also take in the sons of living men. Boys may enter it at the age of six and must be under twelve, and from the moment they enter, they begin to absorb the discipline and traditions of the Guardia Civil. They remain in the college until they are nineteen, when they are turned out full fledged guardias, assuming they have passed all the very stiff examinations.

Mallorquin Mushrooms

The building boom in Mallorca continues to grow, and at the present rate of progress we may soon expect to find a villa all built and completely furnished for every tourist that steps off the boat. It is the nearest thing to a mushroom growth that the Island knows.

It is almost impossible to live outside of earshot of the mason's mallet, and yet the demand seems to keep up with if not a little bit ahead of the supply.

The latest factor in the building boom has been provided by Señor José Femenias Oliver. Señor Femenias, who built the Hotel Victoria, has had a good deal of contracting experience on the Island. Now he has opened an office in Palma to take in contracts for new villas in the modern style, or in any other style that the owner desires. He believes that since a fair number of foreigners are now constructing their own homes, there is a definite need for a contractor who understands their tastes and fancies.

REVIEW OF THE WEEK'S NEWS

After considerable rumblings, the political storm broke over Great Britain during the week, and when the weather cleared a bit, the free traders were no longer in the Cabinet, but the National Ministry was still in existence without changing its name.

This is one result of the Empire economic conference at Ottawa. The tariff policies there agreed upon could not be reconciled with the Liberal conscience, so part of the remnant of that once great party has joined the negligible opposition to Prime Minister MacDonald.

Sir Herbert Samuel and Viscount Snowden, the two chief departures, take their objection on the ground of imperialism and the impropriety of the present Government adopting a tariff policy. The Prime Minister, however, still thinks that there is sufficient emergency to dispense with party rule. In view of the general world economic situation he will probably carry the country with him.

Ho Hum in Geneva

The League of Nations Assembly session got under way with a blistering speech by President de Valera of the Irish Free State. He plainly remarked that the League would never get anywhere by simply having sessions at which long speeches were made advocating noble principles of disarmament, co-operation, international amity, etc., unless something is done to carry out those principles.

The rest of the meeting so far has been devoted to long speeches advocating noble principles. Every nation is willing to carry out the aims of the League if it is done its way.

Premier Herriot of France contributed the latest pacific address along these lines. The German Foreign Minister left Geneva when he heard such a speech was to be made. Foreign Secretary Henderson of England also left, and the rest listened with patience to a reiteration of the French stand.

Experts

With the skill that comes only from intensive practice, the German political parties are preparing for the new election — the fourth in a year. In spite of the lesson of experience, the voters are quite as excited about it as before and their leaders do not attempt to correct the impression that the result of the poll will make a difference.

India Passes Another Crisis

The Indian situation took a turn for the better last week and Mahatma Gandhi is eating regularly again. His hunger strike has been called off for the Government now recognizes the pariah as more or less a human being. The country had survived another crisis.

Sugar Politics

Cuba joined the ranks of troubled Latin American countries last week with a series of rioting and assassinations of a pointedly political character, but the rule of President Machado was not seriously disturbed, good news to U. S. sugar interests.

Master of Chatter Visits Palma

Señor Federico García Sanchiz, the king of «chatter», was at the Mediterráneo this week for a short holiday. In any other country Señor Sanchiz would carry the dignified appellation of lecturer, as he has an international reputation for entertaining his audiences from a platform for three hours on end. But the Spanish people are discriminating and do not attempt to lend to an evening's diversion, an atmosphere of forceful education.

Although officially an author — Señor Sanchiz has written a dozen or more books on travel and several novels which have been translated into English and German — that versatile gentleman has established for himself an enviable reputation in what was originally a hobby with him; that of talking on practically any subject of topical interest or connected with his travels. During the last four months he has visited Germany, Scotland, Ireland, Norway, Austria, Jugo-Slavia, Turkey, Palestine, Egypt, Cyprus and France, gathering material for his charlas, as his talks are called in Spanish. He was one of the passengers on the second cruise of the Graf Zeppelin in 1930, all for the sake of adding another story to his repertoire.

Now Señor Sanchiz is bound for Madrid where he will deliver a series of charlas on his recent travels, but he will return to Palma at the end of December and is already booked for three talks here.

There have been a great number of French and Spanish tourists at the hotel this week, among the latest arrivals are Mr. and Mrs. Lees Ralfs, Mrs. Mehemina Shearman, Mr. Bernard Sourasky, Mr. August Hardiman, and Mr. Robert Joseph Stora.

New Guests at Son Vent

The Exochorda brought three new guests to the Anglo-American guest house in Porto Pi last Friday. They were Mrs. Andrew Albright and her two daughters, Miss Albright and Mrs. Julia Haliday. The Albright family come from New Jersey and expect to spend the winter in Mallorca.

Reservations were made early in the week for tables for the Sunday evening buffet supper that is served on the terrace of Son Vent, weather permitting. When the evening breezes blow a bit too strong for the enjoyment of the guests, the tables are moved inside and a hearth fire adds to the setting as well as to the comfort of the diners. A couple of guitars strum popular Spanish airs during the evening.

Capt. Tompkins is patiently waiting for favorable weather to speed him across the Atlantic. The trip from Marseilles to Palma was so bad that the ship had to be completely overhauled when she docked here. Mrs. Tompkins and their two children will return to the United States on the sailing vessel.

Mrs. Tompkins and the children have been at the Pensión Moncada for the last month.

New Manager for the Royal

Mr. Juan Guenther has given up his pensión in Barcelona, which he and his wife have run for fourteen years, to take the position of Manager of the Hotel Royal. Mr. Guenther contemplates many changes for this hostelry and is busy reorganizing the old regime.

The Royal, like many of the other hotels of Mallorca in the last year, has found that the staff of other times is not adequate to handle the vastly increased business which has descended upon the Island.

Some of the present guests at the Royal are Mrs. Beulah Hardy, Mr. and Mrs. F. Wahl, Mr. W. Feist, Miss R. Allen, and Mr. H. Nelles.
