HINTS FOR A PUB-CRAWL IN SPAIN

WHAT shall we drink? Most of us have asked the question helplessly and answered it by a blind stab at the wine list or by leaving the choice to the discretion of the waiter. Even those who can make a discriminating selection among the wines of other countries find themselves at a loss in Spain.

The result of guesswork, guided mainly by the figures on the right hand side of the card, is more than likely to be disappointing. After a few unsatisfactory experiences, the visitor is apt to decide that all Spanish wines are bad. He would be wrong; there are plenty of vintages to suit every taste, although so little known to most travelers that occasionally a party of them in a restaurant will order a bottle of sherry as a table wine and have it served in wine glasses, not because they do not know sherry should be drunk before or after a meal, but because the name on the list conveyed nothing to them. Yet Spain in third to France and Italy in wine production and still grows the grapes that were once the most sought after by connoisseurs everywhere.

King of them all is sherry, in Spanish called Jerez after the province where it has always been produced. Nowadays we are prone to consider Madeira as a rival, but sherry, good sherry, remains among the first loves of every judge of good wine, although perhaps its more general popularity is not so great as it was fifty years ago. The main reason is that sherries scarcely deserving the name have from time to time been foisted upon a market slow to discover that ignorance is not always bliss.

Sherry falls naturally into three main categories. The first is Fino, a delicate wine of pale color and gentle fragrance. The second is Amontillado, a heavier wine which needs a longer time to mellow and get its fuller flavor. The third is Olorose, and is much darker and heavier than the others. Of course each of these classes comprises many varieties and degrees of excellence. The famous Vino de Pasto falls into the Fino class. Amorose or old golden and brown sherries are members of the Olorose group.

Announcement

With this issue, the MAJORCA SUN inaugurates a Barcelona supplement which will give to readers in Mallorca news of the Spanish metropolis, and to readers in Barcelona news of their own community. In future the Sun will contain more pages, but the price will remain 25 céntimos.

The Barcelona correspondence will be found in this number on pages 8 and 9.

A feature of the finest sherry is that not only does it continue to improve with age, but its fine qualities are not diminished if it is uncorked. A decanter of sherry may be relied upon over an indefinite period, even if left unstopped.

The process of sherry production and blending is extremely intricate and difficult, which is one reason on for the existence of many inferior brands. The dry and the sweet sherries are made from the same grape, in some instances. When a dry wine is desired, the grape is pressed immediately after it is gathered, but if a sweeter type is wanted, the grapes are laid out in the sun to dry, leaving only the body and sugar of the fruit. Other light sherry wines are later added to make up the liquid content.

It was the dryer variety that Shakespeare praised when he put into the mouth of that prince of toppers, Falstaff, the lyric prose:

"A good sherris-sack hath two-fold operation in it; it ascends me into the brain; dries me there all the foolish and dull and crudy vapors which environ it; makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble, fiery delectable shape; which, delivered o'er to the voice, the tongue, which is birth, becomes excellent wit. The second property of your excellent sherris is the warming of the blood; which before cold and settled left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice; but the sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme."

No doubt Shakespeare knew well what he was talking about, and the sherris-sack, which has such a good Elizabethan English ring to it was as close as the men of that day could come to the Spanish Jerez-sec.

But to appreciate to the full Falstaff's pleasure, you must be careful about ordering your sherry. It must always be remembered that fine sherry is as much the product of the expert blender as of the grower, and the maker's name on the bottle is of considerable importance. That name must be one with a reputation behind it if you are to be sure of your ground.

Lesser known brands may be quite as good as their famous rivals, but you will have to do a good deal of experimenting to find them. Such names as Gonzales Byass, Pedro Domecq, Williams and Humbert, Garvey, and S.A.V.A. are safe guides.

English Pianists Coming

Miss Ethel Barlett and Mr. Rae Robertson, the English pianists, will be heard in Palma next Friday evening at seven o'clock in the Salón Mallorca. The concert is being held under the auspices of the Asociación de Cultura Musical which has in the past given Palma the best music the city has heard.

Miss Barlett and Mr. Robertson will offer a program of Bach, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Grieg, Debussy, Saint-Saëns and others, both classic and modern. The pianists have been much applauded and well reviewed throughout the world, and are well known to the musical capitals of both Europe and America.

Tickets for the concert may be obtained at the Salón Mallorca on the evening of the performance. The hall is located in the Calle del Call, near Plaza de Santa Eulalia.

Sóller Players' Success

The success of the Sóller Players Club was repeated last Wednesday afternoon at the Teatro Principal when they offered to a representative and enthusiastic audience, a one act play called The Rest Cure.

The honors were divided between Mrs. Dixon Clegg as Muriel, the slavey, and Mr. Dudley Dean Bigelow as Clarence, the self-centered victim of his imaginary ailments. They were ably supported by the rest of the cast which included Mrs. T. G. Blakeman as the weary wife of the patient, and Mrs. R. von Broeen and Mrs. W. F. Duke as the gay and casual nurses assigned to the malade imaginaire.

Mr. Dixon Clegg played an important part in the success of the play in supplying the noises off stage. His imitation of a London street singer was most realistic.

Mr. Roydon Wilkinson played some of his own harmonies of Hungarian melodies and Mrs. Louise Galbraith, with Señor Miguel Coll as her partner, danced several of the Mallorquin dances in costume, to the accompaniment of a local orchestra.

Mme. Renée Mattez-Eldere, a pupil of Massenet, delighted her audience with selections from Chopin and one of her own composition.

After the performance, a large number of the audience adjourned to the Grand Hotel for tea.

The proceeds of the entertainment went to the local hospital funds and other charities.

Later in the day Lady Sheppard, well pleased with the success of the venture she had sponsored, and those of the Sóller Players Club who had come down to Palma especially for the performance, returned to their homes.

OF PERSONAL INTEREST

The English cruiser Sussex steamed into port Friday morning with Captain Hugh England in command, and the usual official calls were made upon the local authorities. They were promptly returned by the Civil Governor and the representative of the Commandante General. Yesterday, Saturday, Mayor José Villalonga was received on board the Sussex.

The usual football match was held in the afternoon between the members of the Sussex crew and Mallorca's prize team of the Club Deportiva. The various social and athletic organizations of Palma have extended the courtesy of their clubs to the officers and men while they are in port, and the Club Deportiva has invited as their guests at the big match today, the entire staff of the cruiser.

Captain England and his officers will be at home Monday from 4 to 6.30 to all member of the British community, and the general public are welcome to inspect the ship any other afternoon before it sails. It is expected they will leave early Tuesday evening.

Mr. Jean du Bouillier, artist and poet, who has a pent house on the roof of the Hotel Royal, started off on Wednesday with Mrs. Louise Beach and Miss Betty Brown of Terreno, for a four day walking tour of the island. Their itinerary included several places off the beaten track.

Mr. A. Buffum arrived from England the other day and is living on his yacht, the Rendezvous, which has been lying in the harbor for some time. Mr. Buffum brought with him a crew for his boat and plans to do some cruising in these waters as soon as his mother joins him here.

Mr. Edward T. Callan of Puerto Sóller left for Antwerp where he will meet his brother, Firmin, who is expected to arrive there on the S.S. Lapland Monday. After a short trip through France, they will both return here for an extended visit.

Mrs. Ivan Lake, the wife of the British Vice-Consul, left Saturday for a visit to England. Mr. Lake, who is resting from his official duties which are being attended to in his absence by Mr. James Lindo Webb, will remain here. His plans for his holiday, beyond that of getting completely rested, are still uncertain.

Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Pietsch, who had expected to return to England, have taken their house in Pollensa off the market. They have decided to remain in Mallorca.

PALMA-NEW YORK SERVICE

INAUGURATED YESTERDAY

The prospect of direct Palma to New York passenger ships proved to be so attractive to Americans planning to return home that the American Export Lines have planned to use their four newest and finest ships for the run, Mr. Fred Citriolo, the company's representative, announces.

The first of the American Export ships, the Exeter, sailed yesterday afternoon on the inaugural trip of the new service, carrying eight passengers from Palma. They were: Mr. R. F. Brown, the Philadelphia cartoonist, and Mrs. Brown; Miss Katherine M. Burke, principal of a school in Honolulu; Mrs. Eva M. Benoit of Boston, who is returning home for the wedding of her son; Mrs. R. A. F. Merrill and her daughter, and Miss Majorie Glass and Miss C. Brooks. The last two came all the way from Paris to make the trip on the Exeter.

A number of visitors inspected the ship during the short time she was in port and were impressed with her modern, comfortable furnishings and extensive deck space.

Since the new service offers the fastest, most convenient route to the United States, Mr. Citriolo believes many Americans will avail themselves of the EX ships. Advance bookings for the sailings, which are scheduled for every alternate Saturday, may be made through any tourist office. If there is sufficient demand for cabins, the Export Lines may inaugurate weekly sailings from Palma. The ships were built only last year and have the most modern comforts with the spacious cabins and artistic public salons favored by the best naval architects.

Need for an American Consulate in Palma

The current season has brought so many citizens of the United States to Mallorca, and with them the prospect of so much American shipping and trade, that there are strong hopes that Washington will provide a consul for Palma.

At present American interests on the island are cared for by the Consulate General in Barcelona. At intervals the Consul General, Mr. Claude J. Dawson, or a member of his staff visits Palma for a day or two to transact such business as may have accumulated.

There is a general feeling among both Spaniards and Americans resident here, that with the increasing American activities in Mallorca, these periodic visits are inadequate to the needs of business and of tourists. Tourist trade in itself is never of sufficient importance to warrant the establishment of a consulate. But shipping is quite another matter.

If the projected permanent service of the American Export Lines between Palma and New York should be followed by the inauguration of other services, there is no doubt that a consul will be sent. Increasing trade, even without the regular and frequent arrival of American ships, would also warrant the placing of Palma on the list of ports needing an official government representative.

The convenience to tourists would be great, for there is at present no one to whom American citizens can apply for help and information. Passports needing renewal must now be sent to Barcelona, and while Mr. Dawson's office is prompt in executing these formalities, it is not as easy as it would be if there were a consul on the spot.

A number of visitors from the United States have interested themselves in the proposal to request Washington to act in this respect. Prominent among them is Mrs. Julia Loomis, aunt of the American Secretary of State, Henry L. Stimson. It is recognized that in these days of economic depression, when the government is talking at great length about retrenchment in all administrative expenditures, the idea of adding another name to the consular list may not be enthusiastically received.

However, it is believed that Palma's claims to a consulate, claims which are constantly becoming more and more obvious, will prevail even in the face of a wave of economy.

One of the drawbacks is that American consular posts are now full time jobs, and consuls are not permitted to accept other employment. In the old days a part time consul would have been placed in a port such as Palma long before there was as much need for him as now exists.

Perhaps one of those who will most appreciate the establishment of an American consulate is the British Vice-Consul, although he is too polite to say so. Most Americans in search of consular assistance find their way to his office, but he cannot officially help them.

Mail Connections for U.S.A.

The fastest possible mail service from Palma to the United States for the coming week will be provided by the ships listed below. The name of the liner and the port from which it sails must be included in the address of all letters and parcels to insure their being sent in this way.

World's Oldest Press and Oldest Publishing House Still Working Together in Palma

ON the top floor of a Palma house, looking out onto a sunny patio the oldest publishing firm in the world is printing books on the same press the founder used for work more than 350 years ago. The press, only three years younger than the oldest known machine of this kind, is by far the most ancient in actual operation.

The House of Guasp, printers for ten generations, has seen the development of an industry from the days of the primitive press, wooden type and wood cuts, to modern linotype machines and rotary presses. Since 1579, when Gabriel Guasp enlarged his business from that of book-seller to that of publisher as well, the firm has always been headed by a member of his family, descendants of his brother in the direct male line.

They have always done business in the immediate neighborhood of their present location in the Calle Morey, and and in all that time Gabriel's press has never ceased to work. Built of solid, massive timbers fastened together with huge iron bolts, the clumsy machine can still produce excellent impressions. The House of Guasp has just finished printing upon it a collection of 1,500 wood cuts nearly as old, some of them, as the press itself.

Mallorca was, comparatively speaking, a far more important place in the world when Gabriel Guasp started his press than it is today. It was still one of the leading commercial ports of the time, and entered with zest into the general cultural activities of the day. Spain at the peak of her power as dominator of the world; Philip II was just about to conquer Portugal and had not yet dreamed of an Invincible Armada to conquer England. The moving spirit of the age was religion; the books that Gabriel Guasp was publishing were intensely theological.

There were books on the psalms, on the prevailing religious disputes, the writings of Ramon Llull, a life of that most saintly of Mallorquins. There were also some secular works on medicine, on rhetoric, the news of the day. The first newspaper in Mallorca was ground out painfully on Gabriel Guasp's old press.

Hundreds of old wood cuts—book plates, title pages, initial letters, illustrations of religious subjects playing cards and decorations—have survived the ages in the Guasp shop. Old blocks, worm-eaten, worn and broken have been carefully guarded along with others in an excellent state of preservation. The 1,500 best of them have been gathered into the collection printed in the old press.

They represent the entire early history of printing. There are all degrees of skill in the workmanship, but most of them are surprisingly good with occasional touches of positive genius. Most of the designs are religious, but there are others more secular and one group of antique playing cards forms an almost complete set. On these cards, clubs are actually clubs; spades are swords, the Spanish, word being espada; diamonds are polygonal figures much more nearly resembling real brilliants than our own conventional design, and hearts are cups.

The excellence of the reproduction on the old press varies considerably, depending to some extent on the strength of the man who operates it. Bracing his feet against the side of the old machine, he hauls on the lever with all his might, and the heavy block creaks slowly down upon the cut. If the operator is not strong enough, he gets a pale impression; if he is over-powerful, the result is too black.

Yet this press was not the first in Mallorca. There was a printing establishment at Miramar de Valldemosa in 1485, but it had gone out of business before Gabriel Guasp branched out into publishing. The oldest known press is in an Antwerp Museum. It was made in 1576, only three years before the Guasp press, but it has not been used in centuries.

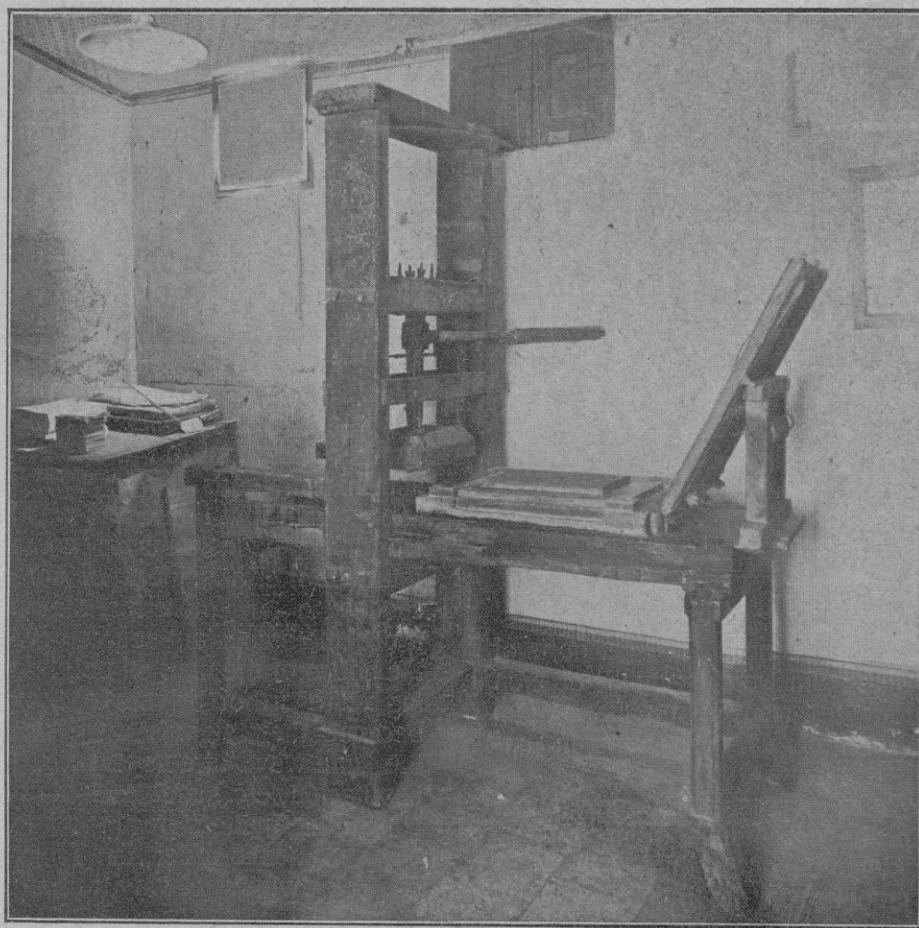

For generations the 1579 press was the mainstay of the Guasp firm, but gradually more modern methods intruded. There are printers in Palma who remember the equipment which replaced the old hand operated machine. The then new labor-saving device was extremely ingenious. The press was power driven, but it was designed long before the days of electricity. The shaft was built through the floor into the cellar where all day long a patient old horse walked round and round in a circle supplying the motive power of the Guasp press. All went well except on the never to be forgotten occasion when the poor nag got excited and broke into a gallop. Round and round he dashed; the press upstairs was running at a mad, impossible speed; the operator was vainly yelling Whoa! Business ceased at the House of Guasp until the power plant could be soothed into his normal pace, and there was born a new classic for printers to hand on to each other.

Such accidents do not happen to the older machine. Nothing could hurry it. It dates from a day when no one even wanted to make haste. Craftsmanship was a great deal more important than time, and a man who had labored for months to produce an artistic design was willing to give equal leeway to the printer.

Later, perhaps, an undercurrent of impatience may have been imported, for the veteran is hardly the ideal press on which to print a daily newspaper. Yet for more than a century, Palma's daily was turned but on this machine, a very small sheet with an extremely limited circulation, but it is one of the wonders of science that the paper could appear at all.

Before that happened, the Guasp family had survived the most serious threat to its continued existence as the oldest printing dynasty in the world. Plague, the worst in the island's history, swept Mallorca in 1652, and two of the brothers Guasp died. But a third survived to hand on the family traditions to his sons.

A Letter of Encouragement

To the Editor, the SPANISH TIMES:

Judging from my experiences in other parts of the world, I think that I am voicing public opinion when I say that a long felt want in the shape of an English newspaper will be very welcome in Barcelona.

Doubts have been expressed by newspaper owners here as to the acceptance of an English page by the other Colonies, but I think it a short sighted view and emphasises the individualism of those newspapers. It so happens that the German, Swiss and French Colonies here practically all speak and read English, and I myself am a member of a Book Club where I am the only English member amongst Spaniards, Swiss, Germans and French, and nearly 50 per cent of the books are in English.

A means of supplying the English speaking people here with news of this town and country, with information from abroad and those interesting items pertaining to and emanating from the British Club and the Golf Club will be very much appreciated, and this venture of yours I am sure will be crowned with the success it deserves. I and my friends can be counted upon as fervent adherents to "the cause".

Traffic in Barcelona

To use the words "Traffic Control" would be too satirical when applied to Barcelona. One of the greatest founts of amusement to the visitor is the traffic question here, particularly since the innovation of "one way" streets. It has been said that one who can drive safely through Barcelona, can drive anywhere in the world.

When it was proposed some years ago to appoint a body of urban police to control traffic, a large number were sent to Paris to study the "gendarme" and his methods. (Why Paris nobody seems to know, as at that time Paris was the best city in the world for pedestrians to commit suicide). They returned after a sojourn of some weeks and proceeded to put into effect the result of their study. It became a constant source of amusement to watch the antics of the men on point duty, and the charming disregard of drivers to their signals, probably because their signals were so mixed. Then came the "one way" streets (Lauria, Pelayo, Fontanella, Diputación, etc.) and so far as tyred vehicles were concerned, matters began to improve. But, although a governmental order, the Tramways decided to go on their own sweet way, in both directions.

To law abiding citizens it is a matter of hopeless conjecture as to why the trams are allowed to go in both directions and other vehicles not. Visitors driving their own cars get into constant trouble unwittingly with the tram drivers, and these latter are perhaps the worst offenders against the laws. They quite deliberately ignore the traffic light signals, or policemen, trusting to their heavier vehicles and apparent immunity to override any decent courtesy or law. It is time that measures were taken by the authorities to stop this flouting of the law and disregard of public order. Barcelona is undoubtedly the most important and beautiful city on the Mediterranean coast, and must be spoilt by the inertia of the governing officials who allow such complete disregard of the laws they themselves create, thus bringing Barcelona an unwarranted ridicule from visitors from abroad. It is to be hoped that some changes will be shortly made under the Republican regime, which has so far successfully levelled the classes and made for such improvements as Spain has never seen before.

(This article was written by a member of the English community, and the views expressed are his.)

A Swoop to the Bath

From the park on Montjuich above the city by aerial railway to the popular bathing beach of San Sebastian has become one of the thrills of Barcelona, and watching others make the trip is a sight all visitors enjoy.

Four coaches, each of which can carry twenty passengers swoop down the mile long cable from the park on top of the mountain to the beach, or from the beach to the mountain. It is a breath taking trip either way as the coaches fly along.

The aerial railway is a triumph of modern engineering. The cable is slung between two towers, one of which is 400 feet high. It needed 1,400 tons of metal to build and has a restaurant with accommodations for 300 diners at the top. The foundations for this huge structure had to be laid under water. The lifts which carry passengers from the ground to the landing platforms at the top of the towers are the fastest in Spain, travelling at a speed of six feet per second.

Besides being one of the sights of the city, the aerial railway adds considerably to the joy of life during the summer, making the hitherto long trip from the cool heights of Montjuich to San Sebastian comfortable and pleasant.

This is the first of a series of short articles which will appear in these pages describing interesting places to visit in Barcelona.

The Seaman's Institute

All British and American sailors are welcome to come along to our rooms. Free teas, whist drives, etc. can be enjoyed nearly every Saturday evening. Billiards on a full size English billiard table will add to your amusement.

A short service is held for seamen every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock.

Anglo-American Dance

The Anglo-American Dance Committee announce that the next dance will be held at the Ritz Hotel on Saturday evening, April 16th.

As a special inducement to members, tickets may be purchased prior to twenty-four hours before the dance at the low price of 10 pesetas each. Tickets to members and non-members after this time, are 15 pesetas each, at the door.

Whether this will be the last dance of the season depends on the attendance. If the attendance on April 16th is good, and you want another, you are asked to let the committee know.

For the benefit of the uninitiated, the Anglo-American Dance Committee was formed in the Fall of 1929 for the English speaking residents of Barcelona and their friends, in order to organise dances and other forms of amusement.

Mr. Norman King, H.B.M. Consul General and Mr. Claude J. Dawson, U.S. Consul General, are the joint Presidents. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. C. Hughes and the Hon. Treasurer, Mr. G. F. Currell. These officers are assisted by a representative committee chosen from the English speaking colony.

Barcelona British Club

Notes of the Week

The Annual General Meeting will be held on May 6th in order to hear the Hon. Secretary's report of the past year. The Audited accounts will be submitted by the Hon. Treasurer. A notice appears in the Club requesting nominations for the new Governing Committee, 1932-3.

Membership now exceeds 240 members. It may be well to note that membership is open to all British and American subjects and also to any foreigner with a speaking knowledge of English.

Billiards Handicap

Mr. S. Morris won the G. Smither's Cup for the second time.

Snooker Handicap

The draw for the Snooker Handicap is out. The first round is to be played before April 21st.

Mr. Marlowe, H.B.M. Vice-Consul, who has been in Barcelona for the past 18 months, is leaving very shortly to take up his appointment as Consul at Bahia, Brazil. Mrs. Marlowe left for London on Sunday, April 3rd.

Mr. C. A. G. Meade, H.B.M. Vice-Consul, has arrived in Barcelona to take up his duties here. Mr. Meade's previous post was at Bangkok.

The third round for the Madrid cup takes place at the new Barcelona Golf Club today, Sunday the 10th.

Code of Honor

The cafés all along the Rambla in Barcelona were crowded, and it was inevitable that the Englishman should have to share a table with a stranger, also that he should choose to share it with a fellow countryman. He was obviously reluctant, but determined to be polite.

Tall, bronzed, handsome, he was a fine example of the type that have made the Empire, and his companion was proud of his own judgment when the newcomer began to speak of India and the East. Between pulls at his very long drink he told of the land, the queer customs of the people, the magnificence of temples, the splendor of Oriental sunsets. Glorious.

But quite suddenly his whole manner changed. He sighed and hopeless dejection drove all animation from his face.

"I've been through hell out there," he said. "Never go to India if you're a married man. You're not? Then it may be all right for you, but I've been through hell; I lost my wife in India."

The unmarried man murmured confused babblings of sympathy, which the other acknowledged with a graceful nod.

"Yes," he went on mournfully. "she ran off with another fellow. Wanted to come back to me later, but of course I couldn't have that. Not that I didn't want to do the right thing. Settled five thousand a year on her and gave her the flat in London, but it wouldn't do for me to see her. Be very embarrassing for her, you know. So I stopped off in Barcelona for a couple of days on my way home. Wait until she goes to the country next week. The only decent thing to do, and after all a gentleman must have his code of honor, eh? Yes, that's it, code of honor."

The crowd had thinned while he was speaking. He fell silent now, staring into space, but suddenly his gaze focused and he sprang to his feet. Murmuring apologies, he advanced to meet a plain, not quite shabby, not quite young woman before whom he bowed low. She greeted him with a weary smile and turned to a waiter. Silver passed, and the man and woman walked out. Jangling the coins in his hand, the waiter returned to the listener.

"I hope that gentleman didn't disturb you, sir?" he asked. "Oh, it pleases me he did not. So often he makes these small loans from other gentlemen. Oh yes, I know him well. For five years now he comes every night. And every night his wife, she comes to fetch him when she is finished with her work. She dances over there" he nodded vaguely towards the street "and then she comes and pays for him and they go home. A very nice gentleman but sometimes he borrows."

The Magic Jar

To almost every woman is given the secret knowledge that she will cheerfully buy on any given occasion an entirely new variety of beauty preparations, provided the containers are sufficiently attractive and the legend on the label persuasive and convincing — something to the effect that her true coloring is as exquisite as a morning rose if she will but give it a fair chance. It is a pleasant thought to carry, if only for a little while, and for several days after her purchase she feels radiantly sure that her complexion has responded to the magic of the porcelain jar.

For the first two or three days she is blissful — even Cleopatra might have considered herself lucky to have had this tiny pot of magic included in her beauty box! But on the fourth day comes — familiarity. On the fifth — doubt. And by the end of the week — bitter disillusion! The magic has somehow flown; her skin reacts no more to the persuasion of the foamy, delicately scented ingredients and she has decided that after all, the witching jar with the alluring name is just a face cream, and nothing more! She doesn't throw it away; that would be wasteful. But from then on her lavish use of it suggests an utter disregard of its talismanic properties.

Just as she comes to the conclusion that all beauty aids are evanescent, untrustworthy affairs, she casts a fleeting glance at an obscure window in which there discreetly rests on a stand of black velvet, a demure opal-tinted pot with a fetching label. The game's up. The memory of her last beauty purchase, unhonored and unused in a drawer at home, nags at her uneasy conscience. But all in vain. She walks out of the shop triumphant, carrying home her new face cream with the elusive fragrance, for hope never dies.

Boom in Sóller

As the work on the Port of Sóller progresses, bringing nearer the day when that town will be a rival to Palma — it is much closer to Barcelona — the wealthy estate owners of the vicinity are wondering whether or no to be pleased. Their fear is that the peace and quiet of their fincas will be disturbed by the growth of a boom tourist city.

German Police Seek Fugitive Here

Somewhere in the Balearic Islands, it is believed, is a German criminal badly wanted by the police of his own country. So keen is Germany to have him that secret service agents arrived in Palma last week. The man they are looking for absconded with millions and has been traced to Palma. There is a strong suspicion that he went from here to Ibiza, but he has not yet been caught.

Priceless Pictures Burned

Seville.—A fire, believed to be of incendiary origin, has destroyed a number of the best works of art in the old Church of San Julian. With extreme rapidity the flames spread until the whole interior of the Church was a furnace.

Among the works of art destroyed were a Dolorosa by Montafies, an extremely old image of the patron saint of Seville, a picture by Zurbaran and works by Sanchez de Castro and Alejo Fernandez. The most precious of all was probably Zurbaran's Martyrdom of San Julian, but the full extent of the loss is not yet known.

The officials believe that the walls of the interior of the Church were drenched with gasoline before the fire was started.

Letters from Readers

To the Editor:

It is extremely gratifying to find a medical man who holds such a position as Dr. Albertí does, expresses himself so openly about some of the obvious defects from which Palma and its inhabitants suffer. I had rather to restrain myself when in one of the first editions of the MAJORCA SUN, I expressed my opinion about our local shortcomings. In that issue I remarked that the water supply of the Town was deficient. I still think so. Not only is it inadequate for so important a town, but its quality, especially in time of drought, is far from satisfactory. Let us be honest; let us speak as friends, and recognize that Palma is, say, fifty years behind the times.

To the most superficial observer it is obvious how common tuberculosis is in Palma; in few modern towns will so many cases of "humpback" be met with, and the frequency with which the faces of the inhabitants are pitted by small-pox recalls the days of my youth half a century ago.

Now there is one point in which my friend Dr. Albertí and I might differ. He would wish, and quite rightly, the opening of tuberculosis dispensaries, whereas I would wish the opening of doors and windows. It must strike every visitor to Mallorca that the inhabitants appear to dread the sun. They fear the fresh air and sunshine in their dwelling houses, much in the same way as we did 50 years ago. We have learned that the sun and the fresh air are our greatest friends in our combat against tuberculosis and other germ diseases, and in addition to opening tuberculosis dispensaries for the already afflicted, I would carry on a crusade in every school against the at present prevailing conditions.

(DR.) F. GILBERT SCOTT

Palma Theatre Guild

The first complete rehearsal of the Palma Theatre Guild show, The Dover Road, which will be given the night of April 27th, was held yesterday.

Folks with plotting, absorbed, hectic or other odd mannerisms turn out to be Guilders. The solemn one seen prowling and measuring round the Terreno theatre was Ricard Brooks. His drawing, which looked like an engineer's plan of Palma cathedral, was actually the project for reconstructing and doubling the stage of the theatre. He is now at work on a model of the transformation; after the performance the model will be sent to the collection of miniature theatres in the Drama Department of Columbia University, New York.

The one seen through the windows of the printery opposite the Principal Theatre was not a ghost trying to erase the epitaph on his tombstone. It was a Guilder, Norman Jacobsen, working on a lithographer's stone for his own poster for the Guild's firstborn.

The woman who staggered in Palma streets one day last week was also a Guilder. Miss Sybil Sutton-Vane had misspent her previous twenty-four hours as follows: an afternoon directing rehearsals, then she sat up all night typing copies of parts, then she directed a morning rehearsal and an afternoon rehearsal.

Tickets at suscribing members' rates can still be obtained from original Guilders, or from the information bureau in Calle Gomila or from the Grand Kiosk.
