A Visit to the Caves of Drach.

Leaving Palma with the 8 A.M. train we arrive, after having passed Inca, at Manacor at 10 A.M. There a guide will lead the visitor to the auto diligence which goes to Porto Cristo, the harbour of Manacor. From a private car we should see more of the southern part of the Island, but for the moment the road is not in very good condition.

Manacor, a prosaic town of about 14.000 inhabitants existed in Moorish times. It is the second town of the Island and is mainly agricultural although today there are a few factories — one which manufactures artificial pearls and others which make the famous liquer "Anis". The church of Manacor in architectural design is very interesting and resembles somewhat a cathedral.

Arriving at Porto Cristo, eight miles from Manacor, we find ourselves in a delightful little sandy bay with bath huts on the beach and surrounded by pretty little summer cottages. The wonderful blue water invites one to plunge in and take a swim. Porto Cristo is indeed a "Buen Retiro".

To the right are the Caves of Drach, the most considerable in beauty and interest offered by Majorca. They are named the "Subterranean Alhambra" and extend for a mile and a half, their chief attraction being the marvellous lake which was explored in 1896 by the French geologist Martel. The older part of the caves were discovered by two gentlemen from Barcelona who suffered rather a horrible experience. They lost their way and after wandering about for two days and seriously contemplating suicide they were finally rescued and brought above ground in a fainting condition by a hotel manager of Manacor to whom they presented a Roman vase which they had found in the caves. - It is said that the caves were known by the Romans although no other Roman relics have been found.

In the older part of the caves we have the "Lake of Delights". Here we give a description by M. Vuilliers, who visited the caves some years before his friend Martel, the discoverer of the new caves.

«It is a mute and tenebrous world where the silent forces of nature, working in continual motion during thousands of centuries, have given birth to marvels that confuse the human understanding.

«The water is brackish, the degree diminishing as you get further away from the shore; and it has been noted that its level falls when the winds blow off the land, and on the other hand rises when they come off the sea.

«The largest lake is The Lake of Delights. I have it before me and I yet do not see it. The columns interlace, and the vault seems to be supported by pillars; it is not a black cavern, it is an architecture of pale ivory, a subterranean crypt of a marvellous beauty, the vision of a fantastic world snatched for dreams; for notwithstanding the precision of forms all is diaphanous, marblelike, almost unsub-stantial; it is the fairy palace of the Arabian tales, an Indian temple; yet resembles nothing and disconcerts one»

None of these hyperbolical phrases are exaggerated: the Lake of Delights seems really an enchanted place. The fine sketches with which Vuillier confirms his descriptions are most correct; and we still found something greater in the other parts of the cave.

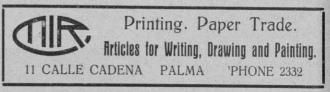

And than Monsieur Martel continues:

«Whith what pleasure the traveller would cross these transparent waters on a light vessel amongst the delicate crystallisations; No emotion could be compared with this, no remembrance could be equal to this, no place would from now attract him as much as this concealed marvel, enveloped by silence and darkness in the depths of the earth». I do not know of any subterranean lake larger than this lake Miramar (such is the name we gave it) that extends the grotto of the Archduke Louis-Salvator. Its length, measured with a tape, is 220 yards from the foot of the fenêtre to the end of the angie that it forms to West; its average width is 37 yards and its depth, varying from 15 to 24 feet, reaches 27 feet at the deepest spot. Under its clear and salt waters, inmense pieces of rocks are seen, chaotically placed; and in the vault are easily recognised the hollows left by these flagstones when they slipped. This vault is only from about 18 to 24 feet high; and this produces even a better effect, because the thousands (perhaps millions would be more exact) of fine stalactites that press there against one another can be more easily admired, forming long tears of diamonds wept by infiltrations. Being so near the water, they reflect there admirably, and it looks as if the vessel was going between two forests of icicles. The effect is the more phantasmlike as the clearness of the water shows all the bottom of the lake. Here and there an island of lime carbonate has emerged as a rocky island of coral; and some of these islands always growing, slower but ultimately higher than the madrepores, have become united with the stalactites of the vault. Rich chanelled columns have been formed in this way, the facets of which had never reflected any light before ours. Many large pilasters bring to your mind tho decorations of the subterranean Indian temples, Kailaça for instance, so much the more as the plays of crystallisation have multiplied the trunks and the ears of elephants; others resemble the scaffoldings of Egyptian domes, pyramids of lotus flowers inserted one into the other. Amongst these islands, amongst these pilasters, under these palls of precious stones we are rowing silently, even afraid of breaking with a slight blow of the oar any of these delicate lace. We had got to such a state of admiration that the vision of a mythological fair of the waters, with her dress of foam on rainbow had certainly not surprised us! It would have looked quite natural to have seen a mermaid emerging from the lake and asking us why we dare to disturb the serene peace of her domains until them inviolate'

On this lake there are arranged concerts each Monday and Wednesday. When the visitors are gathered on the shore of the lake, all lights are extinguished. And far behind one sees a light and hears a sound, and then the light comes nearer and one sees a fantastical view of three electrically lighted boats, and the sounds form a supernatural music of high standard. They are really good musicians and the program is well selected and lends itself to the situation. The acoustics are marvellous. No one who has ever experienced this wonderful impression of light and sound will ever forget it. The proprietor of the caves, Señor Servera whose house dominates the bay of Porto Cristo, has spent large sums of money on improving and making the caves most attractive and comfortable for visitors.

Dr. Scott's Exhibition.

As announced in this journal last week Dr. F. Gilbert Scott opened an Exhibition of his photographs at Costa's Gallery on Saturday 20th February.

To many, whose practical knowledge of photography and its processes is derived solely from the use of a small camera, the negatives being handed over to a professional photographer to develope, the idea may, sometimes, have occurred that photography is merely a question of "pushing a button", and messing about with some chemicals. This is about as accurate as it would be to say that painting a picture is merely an affair of dabbing greasy colours on to a canvas with a brush, though I admit that as regards some modern painters the process does not appear to amount to much more than that. But of course, both statements are very far from the truth. The Art of Photography — and photography at its best is an art-has made tremendous strides in recent years both as regards its technical processes, its vast extension in scientific and technical directions, and more especially in its tendency to become more and more a means of artistic expression. As the painter seeks to express his emotional reactions to the beauty he sees in nature, and in life, by means of his canvas, his brushes, and his colours, so too, in precisely the same way the artist photographer aims at self expression through the controlled effects obtained on a photographic plate by means of light passed through the lens of a camera and limited only by the nature of the apparatus used.

Judged from this point of view it must be said that the exhibition was a very great success. Beautlful as this Island is, here in this collection one realizes that its beauty, so far as it can be recorded in the absence of its lovely colouring, has been adequately so recorded by Dr. Scott in these photographs. The photography of natural colour is yet in its infancy, and is a problem which may never be perfectly solved, but even though these photographs lack visible colour, Dr. Scott has so wounderfully balanced the light and shade of some of his pictures that a sensitive individual who stands before them can actually feel the glow of the colour that should be there, as though invisible colour waves were streaming from the photographs. The atmospheric effects of some pictures are exquisite, the misty backgrounds are brought out with the greatest delicacy, and the management of foreground figures is very effective, and of great value from the point of view of composition.

Dr. Scott is to be congratulated upon his photographs which are clearly the work of a highly gifted temperament, sensitive, artistic, and constructive. Some of them will doubtless appear in Capt. H. de Windt's book on the Balearic Islands which is being prepared for the Press.

C. F. HUCKLESBY.

Mr. C. B. Prescott who has travelled extensivly in Europe and the near East is holding an exhibition of his water colours at the Grand Hotel. The works he is now showing consist of pictures painted in Spain, France, Italy, Morocco etc. Mr. Prescott has had considerable success with his water-colours, particularly in Egypt, where he has spent the last eight winters. He is now visiting our Island for the first time. This artist is an exhibitor at the Royal Academy and also at the Paris Salon, he has held various "one man shows" in London, and has exhibited his work at "The Fine Art Society's Galleries" also at "Walkers Galleries" in Bond Street.

On Tuesday last H.M.S. "Warspite" camouflaged martial aspect, enveloped its enormous guns in brightly fluttering flags, laid long low tables with all kinds of good things to eat, cleared its decks for action, (that of dancing), and invited "the Colony" with its friends and relatives to come aboard, to eat, drink, dance, and be merry, for tomorrow they must needs sail away. All afternoon couples danced to good old English popular tunes— times which warmed the heart and brought tears of nostalgia to some who had been absent from England for many years. Others explored the ship and regarded with terrified awe the remains of a shell which had killed eighty men on the "Warspite" in the battle of Jutland.

On one of the decks the men were playing "blow football" which necessitated the teams lying on their stomachs and blowing for all they were worth, for, or against, a goal— each team had its partisans and the uproar as goals were scored was terrific.

Al together the afternoon was a great success, thanks to these perfect hosts, Rear-Admiral W. F. French and his Commanding Officers.

The dining room and lounge of the Mediterraneo Hotel was a brilliant scene on Tuesday night when a dinner dance was given for the officers of the visiting ships H.M.S. "Malaya" and H.M.S. "Warspite". The tables were decorated with red white and blue, the orchestra was good, and the uniforms enhanced the beauty of the ladies dresses.

The hostesses of the evening were:- Mrs. Milner, Mrs. Lake, Mrs. Dyson, Mrs. Prevost Battersby, Mrs. Waddington, Mrs. F. M. B. Fischer, Mrs. J.R. Musgrave Hanna, Mrs. Bradley, Miss C. K. The second half saw them place four more but one of these was not allowed. The Mallorca then achieved a goal. Score Warspite 6 Mallorca 1.

On Friday afternoon a team from the Warspite played a mixed team from the Baleares F. C. The Warspite team again thowed its superiority by defeating the local team. Score Warspite 1 Baleares 0. Numerous and enthusiastic crowds cheered the winners.

At certain hours the English and American passengers on the Porto-Pi trams seem to be very largely in the majority. The other day the only Mallorquin in the tram was a very opulent fish lady who was sitting with her feet on her "little husband". As usual all windows were closed and the "little husband" augmented somewhat the odour of fish. She departed soon, however, with fish basket and "little husband" held high in the air "para no molestar" helped by the ever courteous conductor.

To the unitiated we must explain that "maridetta" or "little husband" is a small metal box with a wooden handle which is filled with hot charcoal and used as a foot-warmer.

Sir Norman Kemp delivered a lecture on India to a large and interested audience in Terreno on Wednesday afternoon. The Rev. J. B. de Forbes introduced the speaker, explaining that Sir Norman Kemp had just arrived from Barcelona where he had been lecturing on the same subject in reply to recent Indian anti-British propaganda in Spain. Sir Norman defended the British policy in India and spoke of the great difficulties in forming a constitution that would be aggreeable to the many different Indian factions.

As Sir Norman Kemp has lived in India for thirthy four years he undoubtedly is master of his subject. Many Anglo-Indians were present, among them being Lady Sheppard, Mrs. Knightly Burn, Col. and Mrs. Bernard, Major Olmden, Captain and Mrs. Paskall, and others. A collection was taken for the benefit of the Seamen's Widows and Orphans Found.

After a short illness Don Enrique Vives Verger died here on Tuesday afternoon. For thirthy years this well known Palma citizen had been editor of the "Ultima Hora".

Captain David Coe of Hangoed, South Wales, died here suddenly from a heart attack on the 22nd of February. He had been living here for time with relatives to whom we tender our deepest sympathy.

A dinner was given by sixty American ladies and gentlemen in honour of the Washington's Birthday in the Hotel Mediterraneo on Monday 22nd February.

Education and the New Republic.

There are distinct evidences that the new Spanish Republic intends to tackle the question of education. There is no doubt that, especially in the country districts, a large proportion of the population of the Balearics is unable to read or write; in some villages not more than a 50 $^{\circ}/_{\circ}$ is able to do so. At the Lonja houses at the present moment is an exhibition of the plans and models of numerous projected schools in the neighbourhood of Palma.

In England, fifty years ago, education was chiefly in the hands of the Church Authorities; much the same still prevails in Spain, and both countries owe a deep debt of gratitude to the Church for having kept the torch of learning still burning, even if the flame had at times, been feeble for so many years.

Most probably Spain will experience the same difficulties in transferring education from the hands of the Church to those of the State. The process is, naturally, a gradual one. Not only have schools to be erected but colleges, too, for the training of the teachers, but the whole has to be coordinated into a homogeneous system.

At the present time it is interesting to examine the books of the children as they go to school to secure their elementary education.

Each child, according to his age, is given one of Porcel's "multum in parvo" compilations. These four books are crammed with information from cover to cover. There is a little of everything in each volume, and all are well illustrated.

The Grado Medio, the third of the series, is a book of some 300 pages, and the poor child is expected to aquire a smattering of all the subjects contained in it.

A list of some of the subjects is instructive and contains Arithmetic, Grammar, Orthography, Geometry, Geography, Astronomy, Sacred History, Agriculture, Industry and Commerce, Physical and Natural Sciences, Codes of Conduct, the History of Spain, Physiology, some five and twenty pages of Mallorquin words and their Spanish equivalents, and last of all Drawing.

and last of all Drawing. The "Grado Medio" is a wonderful compilation and is well worth the 6 pesetas at which it is published—but I feel sure that any English public school boy would be hopelessly "ploughed" if he had to undergo a stiff examination in this childs book.

But come what may, every one will wish the New Republic the greatest success in its endeavour to make education more, widely spread throughout Spain and the Balearics.

A Strike round the Puig Mayor.

We published in one of our recent numbers an article on Puig Mayor by Don Antonio Pol, a Majorcan gentleman. Now an English collaborator, Dr. Scott gives us his impressions of the same mountains in the following interesting article.

Many visitors, and residents even, think twice before they take long trips into the more solitary and mountainous districts of our Island, as they recognise that it is quite easy to lose one's way, and an accident, such as a sprained ankle might place the adventurer in a very difficult position.

There is an additional reason why these trips are so seldom made, and that is that guides are not easy to obtain, and in the absence of a knowledge of Mallorquín, they are unable to give directions and to gain information.

There is a way, however, whereby these difficulties can be overcome and that is by becoming a member of the Fomento del Turismo. After due election to this society a monthly payment of a couple of pesetas entitles the member to various advantages, not least amongst which is the right of joining in with the Sunday Excursions that are organised by this Society.

A description of one of these trips will give the reader a good idea how these excursions are managed.

The object of this special outing was a trip round the Puig Mayor. The journey would be a long and heavy one and necessitated an extra early start from the head quarters in the Borne. The motorbus that was to take my friend and me and the rest of the party was timed to leave at 6 A.M.

Dawn was beginning to break, and the lamps of Palma still burning, when we started on our journey to Lluch, or rather to Escorca. Soon after Selva and Caimari a road branching to the left took us away from the direction of Lluch Monastery which we soon saw lying beneath us. The road did not, by any means, improve and our willing Bus dragged us up until we were above Escorca at the height of some 2500 feet above sea level

It was at this point that our long tramp commenced. It was soon 9 A.M., and the intermittend sunshine gradually gave way to more or less continual greynes, a condition that, later on, we appreciated.

This part of the country is well wooded and it was remarkable to see the large llex trees fringed with lichens: this is due to the fact that much rain falls in the neighbourhood of the Puig whose shadow tempers the scorching heat of the summer time. The Puig is no exception to the rule that the North side of the hills are better wooded than in their southern aspects. A visit to the Gorch Blau well repaid a half hours diversion from the main track. Here closely confined between precipitous sides flows a constant stream which further down the valley has been narrowed to operate an electric turbine that supplies Selva with light and power. This stream must, at times, have been of very large volume, for the rocks up to a height of 40 feet bear unmistakable evidence of attrition by water, if not by ice.

For several miles the road is sufficiently good for motor traffic, but for the pedestrian it is quicker to make short and steep cuts between the different level of the road. On this walk hardly a hunderd yards of level road is to be met. It is a case of either uphill or downhill, and the stones on these goat tracks are so constantly irregular that one's eyes, necessarily, become glued on one's feet. This trip should not be undertaken by anyone unless they are fairly fit and heavily shoed, and it is no light task for an elderly and heavy man to carry his "avoirdupoids" up and down hill on the worst of surfaces for some seven or eight hours.

The west side of the Puig entails a long tramp, never on the level, and above the tree line. On reaching the summit of each hill one expects, only to be disappointed, to see Sóller and Sóller Puerto lying beneath one's feet.

All the same the walk is far from being uninteresting and every now and then one gets unmistakable evidence of the country having been inhabited long before the date of written history. From these hights can be seen the remains of prehistoric houses and burial grounds—whilst every now and then caves are met with which contain evidence of their occupation by still more primitive peoples.

To the geologist the Puig is most interesting. Here he will find a great diversity of rocks and strata, and even at a height of 3000 feet we found fossilised oyster and cockle shells inbedded in the more recent formations.

At one point in the descent to Sóller there is a very fine example of a small glacier. Here the vegetation abruptly terminates and the ice would appear to have brought down with it an endless varity of specimens of rock.

On the side of the mountains we encountered a cave that had evidently been occupied by one of the very early inhabitants. A very primitive staircase led from the cave above to an excavated chambre beneath, but the size of our matchbox prevented us from exploring it as much as we hope to do later. Situated some twenty yards higher up was the family vault, the mouth of which had not been closed by the huge stone that had already been placed in position in anticipation of sealing the vault for all time. Perhaps it was that the owners had moved to other quarters, again, it may have been that he and his family wery wiped out, or was it, that some fatal epidemic had put an end to him and his? Who can tell? If only the rocks could speak how much they could teach us!

It was not until we were well down on our way to Sóller that we met the first human being, as a matter of fact throughout the main part of our tramp we met with but one animal, or rather, the bones of a lamb that bore evidence of having come to some untimely end. Once more we walking below the tree-line and the pleasant ilex woods gave way to firs, carobs, and olives, until at last we reached the level of the orange and lemon gardens. The evening train from Sóller brought us back to Palma tired and foot sore, but none the less happy that our trip round the Puig had come to a successful end.

Once more may I emphasise the fact that these mountain trips ought not to be taken alone or without a guide. In these solitary regions a small accident might result in serious difficulties, but accompanied by the right weather and companionship no "hike" could be more exhilarating and pleasurable.
