Accusation Against Juan March Approved

ON THE ISLAND

After travelling for the past two months through Spain and France, Mrs. Ellen Root has returned to Palma and is staying at the Grand Hotel. Her young daughter Denise, who accompanied her mother on the trip, is now attending school in Switzerland.

Mrs. Margaret McLain who has been visiting on the Island for the past month, left Saturday on the American Export boat.

Doctor Lunis Chenet arrived Saturday from Paris, and is staying at the Mediterraneo Hotel.

The German painter Mr. Bassenecker, moved into his new home on Calle José Villalonga last Tuesday.

A capacity crowd filled Victor's Bar yesterday afternoon and evening for the official opening. Among the many prominent persons present were Mr. N. L. Clay, director of the Gas and Electricidad Co., Señor Juan Manent, Governor of Mallorca, Baroness Bruyère, Prince Loevenstein von Wertheim, Señor Bonet, Mrs. Kate Perkins, Miss Kay Amm, Mrs. Diana Harris, Mr. and Mrs. Fulton Leser, Señor Oliver, Captain Walford, Baroness Bucovitch, Baron Fifi Bad-sedow, Mrs. Yvonne Arango, Mrs. S. E. Strong, Miss Jean McMillan, Signor Tito Cungi, Mrs. Brookfield Van Rensselaar, Mr. Robert Blair, Colonel Harmon, Mr. Lederer, Count J. Ruppert, Mr. Duncan, and Mr. George Wilkins.

In the evening Mrs. Harris played the piano and Signor Cungi sang a few songs.

Arriving Saturday morning and registering at the Grand Hotel in Palma were Señor Jaime Palau Badia, Señor Juan Socias Torba, Señora Ofilia Palau Baxeras, Señor Jaime Palau Baxers, Señora Maria Dolores Ramia, Señorita Andrie Pensa, Señorita Mathilde Blampoil, Señor Mariano González de Andia, Señor José Franco Mantes, Señora Emerita Fernán Díez and her daughter Señorita Matilde, and Mr. and Mrs. Russell Green.

Miss Pat Byington who recently returned to Palma after a visit in Madrid, deserted her friends once again. Miss Byington took the boat for Barcelona Friday night.

Stopping at the Hotel Royal are Señor Vicente Fugneras, Mr. J. C. Humfrey from London, and Mrs. Samuel Wolfstein and her daughter. Mrs. Wolfstein is from Cincinnati, Ohio, and has come to Mallorca from Monte Carlo.

Mr. Fred Fuchs, joint proprietor of the International Bar in Tereño, is ill. He will be confined in his room at Los Pinos for a few days.

Colonel Clifford B. Harmon, Miss Requardt, Mrs. Harry Fawkes, Mrs. L. Liebling, Miss Viva Liebling, Señor Xavier Videll Quadres, and Mr. and Mrs. Brull were seen at Morisco's Friday night.

Mr. Robert Zimmerman from Vienna is stopping at the Hotel Victoria.

Mrs. L. Liebling was host to Mrs. Eve Hemingray at her home last Thursday night. The high point of the evening was a good old fashioned Bostonian dinner of pork and beans.

The Asistencia Palmesana Saluda begins its fall and winter season of balls at its headquarters in Calle Lullio this Sunday. Many members of the foreign colony have been invited to attend the affairs.

COMMISSION FINDS Track Correspondent Tries To repeat His Success Of Last Week At Hipica Mallorca; Races To Be Broadcast Over Palma Station

Wealthiest Man In Spain Must Remain In Jail Unless His Attorneys Gain Bail Release Until Trial.

MADRID, Saturday.—Don Juan March Ordinas, the Mallorcan millionaire, is to be tried for corruption of public functionaries. So the parliamentary commission on the responsibilities for the irregularities of Primo de Rivera's dictatorship decided today.

The charges against Señor March arose out of the concession of the tobacco monopoly in Spanish Morocco, granted to the wealthy islander by Primo's government. The members of the commission differed considerably as to what charges should be made, but the bribery charge was approved by a majority. Señor Alvarez Buylla, who dissented from many of the accusations, voted for this charge. The Socialist members were in favor of pressing home all the accusations made before the commission, including that of high treason.

Señor March has been in jail about 16 months awaiting the decision of the commission. He will now remain there till his trial, unless his lawyers are able to obtain his release on bail in the meantime.

Señor March, besides being head of the Palma bank which bears his name, and owning one of the most beautiful estates on the Island, is heavily interested in the ferry service between Palma and Barcelona, and in one of the Mallorca daily newspapers. It was thought for a time that he would be released from jail and from the jurisdiction of the responsibilities commission, in consequence of his election to the Tribunal of Constitutional Guarantees.

«Horses Through The Air»—And A Few Side Attractions—As Seen By The Well-Known Mallorcan Artist, Bonastre

The racetrack correspondent of Reportajes, who picked four winners and several place horses in the trotting events last week, has a hard target to hit this week, but is making a stab at outguessing the bookmakers nevertheless.

In the first race, he likes Mazantini or Valiente, to win, with Crespo and Naranjero favored to finish somewhere in the money. There are 38 entries in this event, and it looks as though one man's guess is as good as another's.

When the horses come out for the second race, the Reportajes observer will have his money on Fan of Camaleon to win, with perhaps a little place money on Cabal and Estrella I.

In the third race, Florida II or Diablotin II should finish first, with Atoui II and Alger pressing them.

D'Artagnan and Auberville should put up a good fight to win he fourth, with Alpha VII and Quebec paying something to those who back them to place.

For the fifth heat, Reportajes likes either Collier de Perles or Fam-I-Sol. Damasco and Tibere are named for place money.

The sixth race is the gallop. Marjorie has all the earmarks of a winner, with Ederra and Mar Chica favored to place.

As usual, the races will be broadcast over Radio Mallorca in English, Spanish and French by Reportajes and The Palma Post.

Catalonia Under Martial Law After Hectic Week; Censorship Imposed, Right To Strike Canceled

BARCELONA Saturday—After a hectic week marked by the collapse of the cabinet and the construction of a new one in the midst of its wreckage, Catalonia today finds itself under martial law.

Every newspaper published in the autonomous region is under government censorship; every book or pamphlet printed in the area must be stamped nihil obstat before appearing in the bookstalls or newsstands.

Marrow Stew

1 marrow medium size and young.

1 lb. tomatoes.

1 lb. young turnips.

One half teacup brown sago.

2ozs. margarine.

Scrub the marrow and cut it into large pieces. Remove seeds. Peel turnips and cut into small pieces. Put turnips and marrow into saucepan; just cover with water and bring to the boil. Then add tomatoes skinned and washed, sago and fat. Simmer on very low gas, stirring to prevent sago from sticking. If this is cooked in a double saucepan it will not need stirring. By the time it is finished it should all be thick. Marmite can be added if desired. Serve with raw grated cheese or cheese sauce.

Green Pea Savory

2 lbs. fresh peas.

2 lbs. cooked mashed potatoes.

One half pound grated raw carrot, mint.

1 teacup full of Force.

2 ozs. of fat.

One half teaspoon salt.

Cook the peas and mint together in just enough water to be absorbed.

Drain off any water that is left, and save for sauce or for soup.

Mash peas and add potatoes and raw carrot, then the fat, Force and salt. Mix well. Bake in a greased dish in a quick oven for 25 to 30 minutes. It can be steamed if you prefer. This is very light in texture and is equally nice hot or cold.

WINDOW SHOPPING IN PALMA

Calle Pelaires is an interesting street. It has the virtue first of all of being quiet. There is no jostling crowd to contend with. Then you will find there the following shops which are almost sure to interest you:

Nos. 2-12: Margarita Mateu, who stocks antiques of all sorts including furniture, pictures etc. also real old Mallorcan costumes. Don't forget to have a look at the hand made Mallorcan rugs and carpets. They are priced from 50 pesetas upwards and are interesting to see even if you do not buy one.

N. 16: El Japon en Los Angeles, where are sold all kinds of beauty preparations including «Soir de Paris» face powder, Tokalon, Pond's Preparations and almost anything else you can think of in that line.

No. 40: English and American Shop: where you can get whole meal bread, cakes and preserves of all sorts.

Palma's Smart Set Keeps Weather Eye Peeled On Anne's Shop, Where Style Exhibit Looms

Everybody who thinks he is anybody in Palma's smart set is keeping a weather eye peeled on Anne's shop in Terreno, where a show of fall models is due to take place in the near future.

In the meantime, Anne has some delightful creations on hand to fill present needs. You will see in her shop at Calle 14 de Abril 35 a beautiful Molyneux model of soft grey Djlap (?). This has a short coat which has a high front and fastens down the back with steel spiral buttons, giving a most original effect.

A particularly good point in this model is that the fullness comes in the back.

The ensemble in the accompanying sketch is very smart. The navy coat is worn over a beautifully cut frock in white, faintly checked with navy lines.

There are also some very useful but smart short dark jackets to be worn over summer skirts in these days of variable temperatures.

Don't forget, too, to see the delightful sports clothes. They are both beautifully cut and also practical. Anne's, we might add, is well worth a visit whether a fashion show is underway at the time you enter or not.

GENERAL HINTS

Tea and coffee stains should be covered with borax and left for 15 minutes, then rinsed out in boiling water with a teaspoonful of ammonia added. This will remove every vestige of stain.

Olive oil and vinegar mixed in equal parts are good for cleaning and polishing furniture.

Try sponging your arms and legs with a solution of Epsom salts and water for preventing gnat and mosquito bites. I am not prepared to say that this is a sure method. To avoid mosquito bites first kill the mosquito. This, I should say, the only infallible way!

Do not throw away orange or lemon peel. There are valuable salts in these peels. Put them into a jug full of cold water, cover the jug and let it stand for a few hours. This drink is thirst quenching.

If You Can't Play «Jai Alai», You're Still In The Swim If You Bet A Little

Should you happen to take the blue bus from Palma to Terreno you may notice on the outskirts of the city a large building in process of erection with the sign «Fronton Balear.»

In case you don't happen to know it, Fronton is a Spanish ball court. We understand a ball game with a kick in it is played on it. Not the kind that you have a dab at now and again just to convince yourself that you are still young, but the kind you take up soon after cradle days and stick to with grim determination if you ever hope to be any good.

Jai alai is played with a small hard ball and net to catch the ball instead of a racket, in a court similar to tennis. If you are not an adept you are likely to be flattened out quite neatly by the first shot. This doesn't sound very encouraging, but then there is another and popular use for the game, also with a kick in it. A less painful one. You may be a fan and bet, we hasten to add small sums, on the result of the game.

It seems more than likely that any of the male population missing from their homes will be easy to locate when jai alai has got going. Incidentally I believe Mallorcans have the reputation for betting down to the proverbial shirt on the slightest provocation. Altogether it may be that jai alai will add quite considerably to the excitement of life in Palma in the near future.

Tough Luck

Pity the lot of Sánchez Albornoz. Handed the portfolio of state upon the accession to the premiership of Alejandro Lerroux, Señor Albornoz promptly canceled a lucrative South American lecture tour which he had already commenced and booked passage for Spain.

Imagine the unfortunate gentleman's consternation to learn, while still on the high seas, that the Lerroux government had gone west, and with it his precious portfolio.

There is something ludicrous about the plight of the unfortunate ex-cabinet minister who never enjoyed the opportunity to take an active part in the short-lived Radical government, but there also is a lesson for the follower of Spanish politics.

Señor Albornoz is no ordinary politician. He does not depend on office for his livelihood; on the contrary, he stood to lose by abandoning his lecture tour to take over the thankless post of minister of state.

The fact that the Republic can draw upon such men as Señor Albornoz speaks well for the timber of which her governments of the past have been constructed.

The Radical government, unfortunately, did not last long enough to show whether or not it possessed many statesmen of the highest caliber, but it did prove that the man in the key position of minister of state was head and shoulders above, say, the unlamented Henry L. Stimson, who as secretary of state under Super-Administrator Herbert Hoover added so little to the prestige of the United States.

The Spanish system of government, with which the Americans are not familiar, sometimes seems unreliable; but before the visitor from the United States leaps forward with his criticism of the new republic, let him hark back to some of his own former cabinet ministers—Fall, Denby, Andy Mellon et al—and then decide if he is in a position to heap coals on such men as Sánchez Albornoz, Manuel Azaña or half a dozen others who recently have held high offices in Spain.

THE NIGHT WATCH

Last week we had the pleasure of going over Saoirse, the little square-rigger in which Conor O'Brien and his wife sailed around the world. Man and boy, we have been aboard a good many small cruising yachts, but never before have we seen so much ship in so little space.

We had hoped Mr. O'Brien would tell us what to call his boat. Previously we had referred to her as a square-rigged ketch, for she certainly resembles the old ketches that went out of existence when fore and aft rig came in. The owner, however, prefers to call her a jackass schooner, although he sometimes describes her as a brigantine, knowing that she fails to come up to a brigantine's rig in a good many respects.

Mr. O'Brien, who designed his yacht as a ketch and changed her bit by bit to suit his needs, seems little interested in the matter of her classification, being quite content to call her by any name as long as her sailing qualities remain unchanged.

Living on Saoirse in port is not unlike living in a small apartment. Few of the comforts are lacking—in fact, above deck she has an amount of outside room that would make the apartment dweller gasp with envy.

At sea on Saoirse Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien lead a life that not everyone would find delightful. When they speak of ease of handling, they actually refer to safety under sail. Neither Mr. O'Brien nor anyone else will ever convince us that a boat such as Saoirse can be handled easily when sail has to be taken in. We do believe, however, that under competent seamanship she is in no more danger of going to the bottom than the apartment dweller's home is in danger of being pushed off the tenth floor by an earthquake.

The difference is that any dam' fool is safe in an apartment if he keeps his fingers out of the electric refrigerator, but your average yachtsman would find himself in difficulties if he tried to take Saoirse out of the port.

It must be interesting to have the time and ability to make sailing one's hobby—hot merely to get away for an occasional sail, but to live aboard and spend the time between cruises in experimenting with rigs, redesigning, scrapping the work of weeks and, perhaps, ending up back somewhere near the beginning.

From Mr. O'Brien's point of view, what we are about to say can be considered nothing short of libel, but if we owned his boat we would start by figuring out a way to shorten her bowsprit without destroying her balance. That done, we might decide to shift back to the long nose-pole, but if we did we would put an ad in the paper for a stout seaman whose sole duties would consist of getting out on that heaving spar in a heavy sea.

Now that we have lighted upon the delightful subject of altering Mr. O'Brien's yacht, we propose to stay there whether that gentleman likes it or not.

We should, we think, dispense with the square tops'l, which is a fine kite for the man with the guts to handle it, but a hell of a piece of canvas for anyone with nothing more to recommend him as a seaman than the few cruises we have jotted down in our log.

Having properly maimed Saoirse, there seems no reason why we should not continue. The stay sail that now flies in place of the old gaff-headed mainsail would go, and the conventional sail would come back. That would necessitate moving the mizzen-mast aft and reducing the size of the sail set on that stick.

Now let's see where we are. Hang it all, we've undone all of Mr. O'Brien's work of rerigging and brought his boat right back where she was when he built her.

We think she's the better for the change and hope her owner doesn't mind our alterations too much. That square rig was fine for Mr. O'Brien, but he's got to remember that when he loans her to—well, say, to us—she needs a rig the plain or garden variety of seaman knows something about. We doubt very much if there are half a dozen sailors living today who could have taken her over to Ibiza under the complicated rig we stripped off of her, although there is no doubt that it was a grand arrangement as long as the captain and his wife were aboard.

Well, Mr. O'Brien, we'd better hand you your boat back now. You will notice we changed a few things. We sure hope you won't mind too much, and if you do, about six months hard work in the Ibiza sun ought to see her right again.

We used a little of your sugar, but not much, and that big mirror got broken when we leaned against it. The large bit will come in handy when you're shaving, and the little pieces went down in the bilge, we think. Anyway, if they didn't, you'll find them soon enough.

Thanks a lot for the loan, and if ever there's any little thing we can do for you, don't hesitate to ask us aboard.

The Watchman

Said With Scissors

Two travellers in America, after a strenuous day sight-seeing, returned to their hotel and learned, to their horror, that the lifts were out of order. As their rooms were on the forty-second floor, they decided to have a refresher or two before starting their arduous climb. Just as they were ready to mount the stairs, one said: «I know what we'll do to break the monotony—tell all the yarns we can think of.»

«All right,» said the other. «You start.»

When they reached the fortieth floor, the first man said: «Look here, old man, I've told you all the stories I know; now you tell one.»

A CERTAIN professor wore side whiskers, much to the annoyance of some members of his family. One day he appeared before them, razor in hand, with one cheek shaven smooth.

«How do you like it?» he asked. «If you think it looks well, I'll shave the other side, too.»—Christian Science Monitor.

Mrs. Blupe: «Did you see the Smith twins?»

Blupe: «Yes.»

Mrs. Blupe: «Don't you think the boy is a picture of his father?»

Blupe: «I do—and the girl is a talkie of her mother.»—Mutual Magazine.

NOTES FROM THE IBIZA COLONY

Paul Gauguin, grandson of the famous painter, who has been a resident of Ibiza off and on for several months, has returned to the island and is taking part in the decoration of the El Dorado bar in which a commodious dance hall and several private dining rooms are being installed.

Notwithstanding that his illustrious grandfather found the South Seas more to his liking than his native France, Paul Gauguin of this generation is a Norwegian by birth and prefers the north. His father was a critic of music in the Scandinavian countries, was married in Oslo and was naturalized there.

The painting of the younger Gauguin shows a strong influence of Van Gogh, whose friendship and quarrels with Gauguin are art history.

Gauguin is one of the few foreigners living in Ibiza who takes advantage of the remarkable opportunities for fishing around the smaller islands nearby.

Alcudia Links To Be Ready For Winter Season, In Spite Of Mishap

In spite of an unfortunate mishap that destroyed some of the already completed greens, the golf course at Alcudia will be ready for the players by the time the winter season sets in, the directors of the project say.

The greens were badly damaged by fire when some chemical that was to be used in the construction work got out of hand, but already the work of growing the delicate covering back is nearing completion.

The links has been a long time coming, and the accident was a great disappointment to those who were looking forward to the completion of the course, but there seems little doubt that it will be finished before long.

For several years, a golf links was about the only thing the foreign colony on the Island lacked, but nobody had the courage to finance the construction of the expensive toy.

Finally a halfhearted attempt was made on the other side of the Island, but it went up the river after a few greens were laid. It remained for the backers of the Alcudia project to get after the problem in a big way.

Persons living in the vicinity had expected to see half a dozen loafers appear on the scene and dig away at a rate that might insure the completion of a project in two in the course of the next few years. They were surprised to find with their tools and pickaxes the task of clearing the ground, leveling bunkers and working with a vigor.

Patronato Nacional Del Turismo Lists Inns And Shelters

For the benefit of the traveler the Peninsula, the Patronato Nacional del Turismo has compiled a list of recommended inns and shelters along the motor roads of Spain.

Many of these hostleries are much more than mere places to stop up for the night. Some are rich in historical background and others are beautifully situated, making them worth visiting for more than a mere stopover.

The parradores and albergues, as the inns and shelters are called, often date back to the days when it was impossible to cover long distances on the mainland without stopping for the night far from a town. Therefore, today, it is possible to find delightful locations well removed from the hub of civilization.

Most roadside inns have been completely modernized and renovated, but if the tourist follows the guide which the Patronato Nacional will give him he will have no one to blame if he finds himself without running water or a bath, for all those listed in the guide are well equipped in this respect.

The Patronato officials also look the trouble to look up prices, so the traveler will have no excuse to kick over his bill, unless a mistake has been made. In that case, he will have the official price list back him up in his argument with his mine host.

Prices charged vary in accordance with the luxuries each hostel has to offer, but in many of them it is possible to be put up with a pension for as little as 14 pesetas a day.

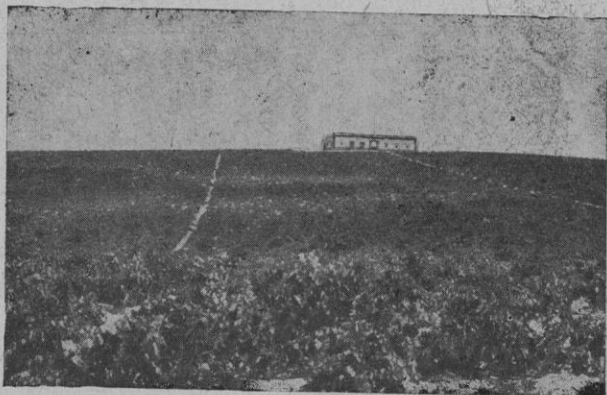

From three to five pesetas covers the garage space for a car, and chauffeurs' pension is well below that of regular guests.

Spanish Wine-Makers Find Wide Market In Europe; U. S. Repeal Called Minor Factor

Spain undoubtedly will benefit by the eventual repeal of prohibition in the United States, but she by no means depends upon that market for the disposition of her wines.

Spanish wines are peculiarly fortunate in that they have never been copied successfully in competing countries. Companies such as S. A. Vinicola M. Hidalgo, manufacturers of the Gitana brand of Manzanilla, find themselves with their hands full trying to fill the demands from the foreign market.

This concern, which is represented in Palma by Town Councillor José Más Rubí, is over a century old, having been started in 1820 by Don Pantaleón José

Hidalgo Bustillo. Upon his death it was continued by one of his sons, whose widow later carried on under the firm name of Vda. de E. Hidalgo. Upon her death, the company was changed by her sons into a collective society and in 1933 the society was given its present name.

Among the prizes won by the products of the company are the Gold Medal of Madrid, 1857; Silver Medal of Cádiz, 1872; Gold Medal of Paris, 1867; Gold Medal of Madrid, 1874; Gold Medal of Naples, 1871; Gold Medal of Paris, 1878; Gold Medal of Chicago, 1894; Gold Medal of Madrid, 1907, and Gold Medal of Seville, 1929.

The accompanying illustrations show the vineyards and storeroom of the company. The great vineyards, storerooms and cellars are located at San Lucar de Barrameda. The combined buildings and grounds are in three divisions, called San Luis, San Francisco and San Roque. The concern was the first to have a storage capacity of 3,000 leather bottles of wine. About 900 barrels yearly are produced.

Influx Of Writers To Begin Soon, Letters From Abroad Indicate

Despite the downward trend of the pound, letters of inquiry addressed to the offices of The Palma Post indicate that a number of English writers will be among those present in the foreign colony next winter.

Most of the inquirers are not looking for the cheapest place on earth in which to live, but merely wish to satisfy themselves that the decline of their currency has not made the cost of living on the Island unbearably high.

Several authors state that they have orders from publishers and contemplate coming here on reasonable budgets to settle down for the several months necessary to allow them to whip their work into shape.

Others, however, claim to be assured of regular monthly incomes for magazine articles and these select Mallorca as a place where they can be assured of quiet without being cut off from civilization.

In answering the inquiries The Palma Post took pains to give an accurate account of the cost of living here, in order to prevent beachcombers drifting ashore.

Involved In Governmental Crisis

GOVERNOR JUAN MANENT

Civil Governor Don Juan Manent was swept into a political crisis last week when the government of Alejandro Lerrox resigned in a body.

An appointee of Señor Lerrox, Governor Manent now holds office pending developments in Madrid. If a successor to the last premier is found in the ranks of the Radical Party or an allied group, it is probable that he will continue to hold office here.

The crisis in the capital was a disappointment to many friends of Governor Manent who no sooner finished welcoming him into office than they heard of the difficulties in which Señor Lerrox had found himself.

UPHILL WORK

At the left, a group of bike racers taking the Coll de Soller in the cross-country event that was run off last Sunday.

The Coll is a tough stretch, but the pedlars hit half a dozen that were worse before crossing the finish line.

Insert, Rafael Pou, who finally won over the best efforts of several other entrants who hung on his tail the whole way.

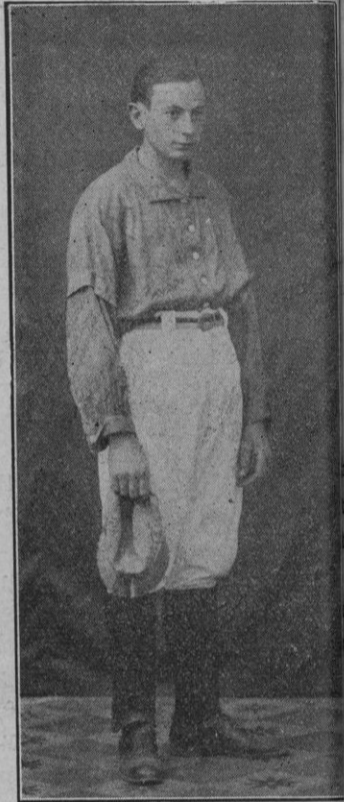

Tasting The Resin

Velasco on his back after stopping a fist belonging to one T during the boxing matches at the Teatro Balear last Monday night.

YOUNGEST AND BEST

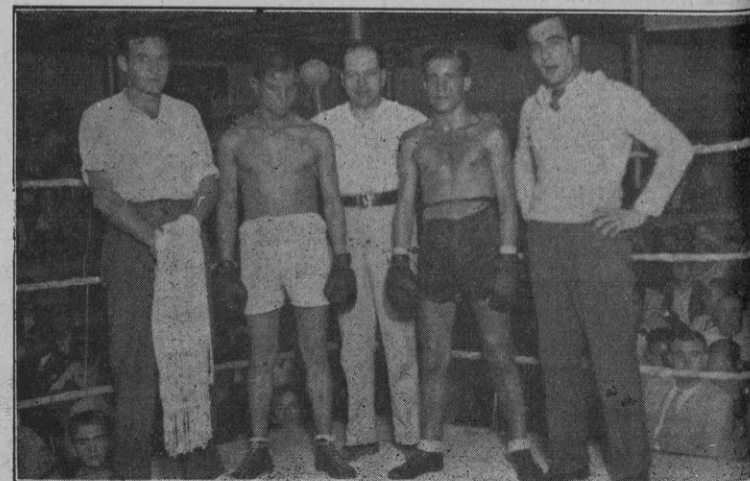

Jockey Solivellas is one of the youngest of the lot at the Hípica Mallorca, but he doesn't let that bother him when Starter Francisco Homs pulls the trigger of the starting gun.

Solivellas is only 17 years old, but he has driven home more winners than any other jockey in Mallorca during the present season. As some of the races have 40 horses entered in them, the feat of bringing home a winning horse is no light achievement.

Before The Battle

The referee, Señor Baeza, flanked by Molons and Santiago, fought to a draw at the Balear last Monday. With each scrapper his manager.
