SPAIN IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

MODERN music that is alive, that is giving the world a vivid and progressive art is being written almost entirely by Spaniards, and for the most part by Spaniards who have not left their own country. This is the view of George Copeland, the pianist, who perhaps has done more than any other man to introduce Spanish music into England and America.

As Mr. Copeland talks, rising at intervals to illustrate his remarks at the piano, the proof is overwhelming. More than any living composers, the Spaniards put into their work an intensity of feeling which completely captures the mood of an audience.

Basically, Spanish music is the expression of the Spanish dance, as the music of Scarlatti was written for the ballet. But the dance has always been a higher art form in Spain than in any other country. The rest of Europe is apt to dismiss dance music as something ephemeral and hardly worthy the notice of a serious artist. That is not at all true in Spain. The true Spanish dance, not the devitalized version which such performers as La Argentina have popularized abroad, is a wild, primitive affair, perfect in rhythm.

«When Imperio made her debut in Paris,» Mr. Copeland recalls, «the curtain had to be rung down, and in America the real thing has been laughed off the stage. The audiences hooted and laughed because they were embarrassed; they were not used to and did not like such primitive artistry.»

Although not appreciated abroad, it is this sort of dance which has given Spanish music its pre-eminence. Here, says Mr. Copeland, «the dance is as great an art as the symphony elsewhere.» The same qualities characterize the country's music, which retains its vigorous beauty as long as it is not diluted with foreign influences. Spanish composers who have gone abroad to live, have weakened their art by over-elaboration of the splendid, alive simplicity which as set their work apart from that of other men.

The quality which immediately distinguishes this work is that there is absolutely no transition from one mood to another. Where the rest of Europe writes an intermediate stage leading from languor to ferocity, the Spaniard snaps immediately from one to the other, just as in his dancing.

Mr. Copeland believes that one of the factors which has contributed to the excellence of Spanish music is the fact that up until a few years ago, the country was isolated from other influences, did not care much about imitating other nations and was quite impervious to outside innovations.

The pianist is enthusiastic about the music which was thus developed, as well as a great deal of the religious music of centuries ago. Much of this, he declares, was excellent but has been forgotten, although occasionally pieces are resurrected. He himself will play one of these at his concert on Nov. 29th.

Spain has really evolved three schools of music. The really wild, primitive compositions are of Andalusia, a touch of darkness underlying the whole. Castile produces an incorrigibly gay music, sunny and carefree, excellent stuff with which to wind up a concert, Mr. Copeland has found. Catalan music has been largely influenced by Provencal and Italian in past ages. All of them trace back not only to the Arab, of which they bear unmistakable signs, but actually to the Egyptian.

Of all living composers, Mr. Copeland believes, the most important is a Spaniard, Manuel de Falla. The pianist promptly played part of that master's Love, the Sorcerer, a macabre but startling and magnificent piece of work. Falla is now working on a tremendous opus which will take eight hours to perform, a combination of opera, symphony and pantomime which Barcelona is eagerly waiting to produce. Falla is typical of his countrymen in that he is almost appallingly exact. When he plays he never makes a mistake; it is all unbelievably correct and precise until Copeland, listening to him, longed for just one little fault. And that, too, is like the dancing. Both in music and the dance, the Spaniard has an exceptional sense of rhythm, never a fraction of a split second slow or fast.

«Falla is the one Spaniard who can live abroad and remain completely Spanish,» says Copeland, «for he lives entirely isolated from the world no matter where he may be.»

Among composers, Mr. Copeland rates Balthasar Samper, the Mallorquin, very high and expects of him better things than he has yet done. Turina, too, is at times excellent.

«His A los Toros gives you the genuine atmosphere of the procession that opens the corrida. It is hard, brittle, the very essence of the ring and at the end, the fanfare of trumpets ushers the bull into the arena. Let me see if I can remember it.»

He could, and as his strong hands flashed over the keys, the typical Spanish scene was re-created. The ring, packed with tense, eager humanity hummed in the brilliant, pitiless sun until the artificial, old fashioned ceremony of the corrida began. There was the swagger of the toreros as they marched in at the head of their peons. Decidedly a vital, imaginative music.

Those who hear Mr. Copeland and the Capella Classica in their concert on the 29th will be treated to examples of the music which the pianist loves. Naturally these will not comprise the entire program; he and Don Juan Thomas, leader of the Capella, are too great artists for that.

The concert will be held at the renovated Teatro Principal, as will all the future offerings of the Asociación de Cultura Musical, under whose auspices this performance will be given. Tickets will be on sale this week at the music shops, Bordados Nell in the Borne and the box office of the theatre.

Crowder Will Open Musical Season

Louis Crowder, the young American Pianist, will have the distinction of opening the Palma musical season with his concert at the Salón Mallorca next Friday evening at 9:45.

While Mr. Crowder has included in his program several of the better known composers, he also intends to introduce to his audience one or two less orthodox compositions; one of these will be a Spanish dance number.

On four different occasions young Crowder's musical talent has been officially recognized in the United States in the tangible form of scholarships. He began his career at an early age and studied under the master, Selmar Jansen. While at the Carnegie Institute, Crowder received one of the four scholarships which really determined his professional life.

This concert will be by way of expressing the young pianist's appreciation of Mallorca, which he will have to leave shortly to continue his studies in Berlin. Miss Sybil Sutton-Vane is directing the concert for the benefit of the local radium fund.

Underground

On Wednesday, Mme. Natacha Rambova will formally open the miniature caves which she, in a manner, discovered in Génova. They have been known in the family to whom they belong, but it has remained for the extremely busy young American to open their beauties to the public.

She has built passage-ways through them, arranged a system of illumination to bring out the best effects and laid out a garden in front. We even hear it whispered that she has refrained from giving obvious names to not very obvious resemblances in the formation of stalagmites and stalactites.

At the same time, there will be opened the little bar and restaurant which she has built to refresh the traveller after he has journeyed through the caves, an excursion of some twenty minutes.

Guild Gets Bouquet

A well attended meeting of the Palma Theatre Guild at the Trocadero on Thursday afternoon heard the officers report on progress so far this season, and at the end of the talking, while tea was being served, there was some brisk selling of memberships among the sixty who attended the gathering.

Aside from the officers, the only speaker was Miss Lucile Luttrell of the subscription department of the New York Theatre Guild, who congratulated the Palma organization on its progress. She recalled that at about this stage of the New York enterprise, there was one subscriber, Otto Kahn.

The aims of the Guild were probably expressed better by a letter from Eugene O'Neill, the playwright, than by any of the officers, and it was read to the meeting. Offering his good wishes for success, he added:

«And once you have a sufficient following of subscribers, you can broaden the scope of your theatre and give your public a chance, which they would not have at home, to see some of the fine plays by the younger English and American playwrights, which are not liable to reach production in the commercial theatre of either country in these depressed times. Then too, there are the plays by recognized dramatists that are barred by the censor — I am thinking here of England — and those other plays, which for some cause or other that has nothing to do with their artistic merit as written — such as bad directing or acting — have suffered an untimely fate when they were produced, and deserve resurrection and a fresh, sympathetic hearing.

«With the ambition and courage your group must possess — or it would never have started itself — I know you can conquer the difficulties that inevitably confront a new theatre and go on to make your Guild a genuinely important achievement.»

As practical evidence of his good will, Mr. O'Neill offered the Guild any play of his it might wish to produce, free of author's royalty.

The Doggiest Bar

In addition to providing amusement and recreation for the visitors to Mallorca, the new road house which is rushing (?) to completion on the highway to Valldemosa is going to cater to the most exclusive and gayest set of dogs in town.

One of the attractions of the Rendezvous (as the road house is called) will be a dogs' bar, where the elect of canine society can come and sip their drinks and tell the latest risqué stories or boast of their prowess with the island cats. Their bar will be of marble, modelled on the famous old Marble Bar of Sydney, and it will be presided over, we understand, by a bull terrier who has passed the bones to the royalty of dogdom. A wonderful fighter before he put on flesh, he is one of the most accomplished barkeeps alive.

Snacks will be served at the bar whenever the patrons of the other bar desire. The Rendezvous, says Mr. A. B. Ford, who is proprietor of the road house, will be ready to welcome both canine and human guests at the end of this month. His official opening is set for Nov. 23rd.

Whoopee in Palma

Not since the days when the merchant princes of the Mediterranean transacted their business in the Lonja by day while their sons gambled away the family fortune by night has Palma seen so much nocturnal gayety as was in evidence Friday.

Even the all day rain could not keep celebrants of Armistice Night from rushing into town, and the foreign visitors were aided by a considerable Mallorquin contingent. In practically all the bars and salons it was a gala evening, and all were crowded.

A new attraction opened on this occasion — the Salón Born, where every table was taken (and some of them twice over) for the inaugural dinner dance. There was a really good orchestra and the dance team was generously applauded. Mr. James L. Holbrook, the new manager, will have tea and supper dances on the new floor every day.

Victor also opened his season with a gala night and introduced some entertainers who will remain for the entire week. A good many of his old clients were on hand Friday to help launch his new season.

At the Trocadero the feature of the evening was a dance competition which was won by Señor Balet, with Mrs. Sales second, and Miss Ruth Van Sant third. It was Miss Van Sant's eighteenth birthday party and was given by her mother, Mrs. R. H. Van Sant. The Trocadero has inaugurated a series of special attractions which will no doubt continue for the winter.

In the Little Club there were the usual series of gay parties constantly changing as some drifted in from other resorts and others drifted out to other resorts.

First Aid to Nature

Mme. Denise Defoe's Institut de Beauté in the Plaza Cort will be ready to start the good work of administering first aid to nature on Tuesday of this week. Her luxurious reception room is but a prelude to the elaborately equipped salon where the magic touch of fingers, well trained in the art, smooth away the signs of age or dissipation.

Another Line to London

With the new year will come still another fortnightly service between Palma and London. The Orient Line expects to have her 20,000 ton ships call here twice a month. The first will leave England Jan. 7th, and the north bound service will be instituted Jan. 28th from Palma,

The Orient Line has doubtless been led to take this step by the popularity of the services already run by the German African Lines and the Union-Castle Line.

Another Guide

A practical and business-like guide book, aptly called «Palma in the Pocket,» can now be obtained at the principal hotels, tourist agencies, estancos and kiosks and is sold for 1.25 Pesetas. THE NATURAL BRIDGE OF SANTANYI

By Don Antonio Pol

(Translated from the original Mallorquin and published in these columns by permission of the author.)

ONE day when I was visiting him at the offices of his review, Baleares, my friend, Santiago Rosinyol exclaimed «Why do you all visit and praise and paint the views of one small part of Mallorca? Why always Sóller, Valldemosa or Pollensa? Believe me there are equally beautiful places. The coast of Santanyi, for example, is well worthy of the painter's brush and the tourist's visits.»

And it is true that in the southern part of the island as well as in the north there are plenty of natural beauties. There, too, lovely inlets, beaches and stretches of rocky coast succeed each other in splendid panorama, full of color and green with field and wood and terraced orchard. Tourists and artists who do not know this part of the island have missed some of the beauties which Mallorca can offer them.

From the pretty little harbor of Porto Pedro around to Cap Salines, there is a variety of beaches and coves impossible to describe, among them Calonge, Samovadar, Cala Figuera which is at the port of Santanyi, Cala Llombrats, es Pontas, es Penyal de's Bous, Cala Marlanda, sa Torre Nova, etc.

All of these spots are picturesque in the extreme, and it is here that there rises out of the water a curious natural bridge, under which boats can easily pass. The rough pillars spring straight up from a considerable depth. The arch itself is twenty meters high by thirty wide, and in the rock above and to one side is a little cave, inaccessible to almost all save the birds which hover around the spot in great numbers.

Those who scramble up the steep and scaly side of the islet obtain a wonderful view of the coast. They can see for miles along the shore, and can enjoy the added satisfaction of knowing that they have discovered a part of Mallorca which many Mallorquins themselves have never seen. It is completely unknown to most of the people, who think of it only as the resort of a few fishermen and the source of a particularly brilliant fish of whose skin tobacco pouches and purses are made for the peasantry.

But there are other fish here in abundance, and excellent sport can be obtained along the rocky parts of the coast. Lobsters, too, the small langosta of these waters, are plentiful.

Everyone knows the famous beauty spots of the northeastern shores of the island. The Foradada of Miramar, that well known rock, has been painted and photographed from every angle and at every time of day by an infinity of artists, who have made it familiar to all the world.

There are places along the southeastern coast equally worthy of general admiration. The scenery is not, perhaps, as grand or magnificent as that which we have so often visited on the regular tourist route. But such spots as the Bridge of Santanyi and many others in the same neighborhood are well worth the time of the painter or of the sight-seer, and should certainly be included in the itinerary of the latter.

Foreign Workers

Referring to the decrees dealing with foreign workers in Spain the following explanatory note has been issued by the Ayuntamiento of Barcelona: Every foreigner more than 15 years of age, who is not naturalized and who has not been born in Spain; who exercises or who has the intention of exercising a profession of any kind to which a salary or wages is attached, must obtain an Identity Card.

The decrees include all salaried persons, as well as those working on their own account employing material which is their own property (a man for example who has a factory the machinery of which is his own property) and manual workers. The obligation to apply for this Card dated from Sept. 10th, and any foreigner who was not provided with this Identity Card before Nov. 10 was technically deprived of the right of working in Spain. As has been said the majority of foreigners who work in Spain are subject to this obligation; domestic servants, teachers, guardians, tutors, governesses, nurses, etc., companions or personal assistants even though they live in the house where they give their services. Persons who have come to work temporarily are not exempt from this obligation.

The note states that there is no question of prohibiting foreigners from working, but it will be necessary to proceed with rigour against those who fail to comply with the orders.

A New Club

A new Anglo-American club has sprung into being in Barcelona, though yet in embryo state, with the object of providing young British and Americans with lectures, debates and discussions on subjects of a cultural nature as well as putting them into touch with concerts, musical societies, lectures given by prominent foreigners, etc.

At first membership will be exclusively Anglo-American, but later it is intended to admit other nationalities, a knowledge of English being requisite. The originators of the movement are the Rev. Mr. C. H. D. Grimes and Mr. J. H. Roberts, known to many through his activities in connection with the ex-service men's association and other enterprises.

A general meeting will take place next Tuesday at 10 p.m. when the Club will be definitely founded.

Armistice Day

The Two Minutes' Silence was observed on Armistice Day in the English Church, followed by a short service. The lesson was read by Colonel Le Man. Two ex-service men laid a wreath, of Flanders' Poppies on the altar, while four more took the collection, amounting to 741 pesetas, to be given to Earl Haig's Fund for Disabled Soldiers. Mr. Norman King, the Consul General, was one of the members of a large congregation, among whom were many ex-service men, the boy scouts and the girl guides.

Further Armistice Commemoration services will be held today. The Ex-Service Men's Dinner took place on Saturday evening. Over fifty men attended, considerably more than have been present for some years.

The Harvest Festival will be held in the Church

Identity Card for Foreigners

El teniente de Alcalde de Política Social has informed the Jurados Mixtos of Barcelona that they advise all foreigners applying for their professional cards of Identity that there exists in the Ayuntamiento a Municipal office or Bolsa de Trabajo in the first floor of the Casa de la Ciudad, open from 10 to 1 p.m. where they can obtain assistance and information, free of Charge, in connection with the decrees relating to foreign workers.

At the same time he requests the presidents of the Jurados Mixtos to forward to this Bolsa de Trabajo details of the requests for Identity Cards, which have been sent to the Ministerio del Trabajo; for they wish to have a full census of working foreigners.

The details will consist of the following: Name; Professional category; Salary or Wages; Name of employer; Age of contract and Length of residence in Spain.

He further adds that if any Jurado Mixto should require personnel for the compiling of this information, the president should at once apply to the Negociado de Política Social of the Ayuntamiento of Barcelona which will at once facilitate the necessary help, for it is necessary, he says, that this work be centralized in the Bolsa Municipal with the least possible delay.

THE MOUNTAIN OF MONTJUICH

By geological study of the coast up and down from Barcelona it has been proved that in prehistoric times the mountain of Montjuich was an island, which later became the head of a península as the alluvial soil brought down from the mountains of the mainland by the rivers Besos on the North and Llobregat on the South settled at its base.

Later the first inhabitants settled here due to its strategic position; the enemy could be more easily prevented from landing and if they succeeded in landing farther up or down, could be more easily withstood from its elevated position. Pre-historic remains which have been found from time to time on the mountain sides, some only a short time ago, bear out this theory. At all events it seems certain that previous to the coming of the Romans an Iberian town called Laye existed on its summit.

Under the Roman domination of Spain it seems to have been called Mons Jovis on account of a temple to the god Jove or Júpiter which was built on it. Some centuries after the passing of the Romans it was known as Mons Judiacus on account of a Jewish cemetery which was on one of its sides. Various sepulchral stones bearing epitaphs in Hebrew have been found in the mountain. Juich in old Catalan signifies Jewish, hence Montjuich.

Many Christians also lived on the slopes and had several churches there. According to ancient historians, Montjuich was in early ages surmounted by a fort, Torre del Farell or Torre de la Guardia. In 1091 light was placed in it to guide mariners. Later the light was transferred to the port and the fort used as a watch tower.

In 1706 Philip IV enlarged and improved the fortification in accordance with the necessities of the times; on Nov. 15th, the Conde de Ulldefelt, amid festivity and the sound of guns, laid the first stone of the actual castle and towards the end of the eighteenth century the Conde Roncali gave the last touch to the fortification as it now is. He also had a road made from the foot to the top. This fortress was visited regularly by the kings of Spain, both for the purpose of enjoying the wonderful view, as well as to be acquainted with the state of the principal fortification of the city. The last sovereign to pay it an official visit was the Queen Regent Doña Maria Cristina, when in 1888 she came to Barcelona with all the royal family for the opening of the exhibition.

The fortress on Montjuich is remembered by Barcelonians as a place of oppression. It is not possible to mention its name to any of the inhabitants without hearing unfavourable criticisms and not without reason. In the month of December of the year 1842, on the occasion of political strife in the city, General Espartero ordered Barcelona bombarded; for two hours projectiles to the number of 1014 were poured into the city; some people were killed, and many buildings destroyed. When the bombardment was at its height, the Barcelonians nominated a commission to approach the general for clemency. At the head of this commission was Lesseps of Suez Canal fame, who was at the time consul for France in Barcelona. The General acceded to his request and gave the order to cease fire. Out of gratitude to the great French engineer and diplomatist, the Ayuntamiento of Barcelona (in 1909) gave the name Lesseps to the plaza formerly known as Jossepets. It is said that Espartero when dying in his palace in Logroño declared that in all his military career the incident which gave him most pain was having ordered this bombardment of Barcelona.

One of the projectiles, 102 centimetres in circumference, can still be seen in Calle de la Avellana No. 2 where it is used as a gas bracket. It fell into a house during the bombardment, was picked up by the proprietor and kept as a souvenir. The house is locally known «la casa de la bomba.»

The mountain or hill, for it is only 213 metres above sea level, is now used as a place of recreation. In 1929 the famous international exhibition was held on the Northern slopes, the site of which has been turned into beautiful gardens for the use of the public. The wonderful fountains which were installed for the exhibition are illuminated every first Sunday during the Summer months as well as on special occasions. The majority of the buildings have been left standing and are used for minor exhibitions during the years. Probably when the Catalan government is in working order these buildings will be given a definite use. The old fortress of unhappy memory for Barcelonians has been delivered over to the city, but for the present its final destiny remains undecided. Some are for having it demolished, others for having it turned into a museum, others again for having it made the centre of a place for general amusement similar to Tibidabo.

GOLF NOTES

By MacGregor

HINTS ON DRIVING

THE first things to consider in golfing are Grip, Position when striking and Swing of the club in striking the ball. All three can vary somewhat according to the taste of the player, but it is best for the beginner to adopt the standard in all three cases.

For a golfer who has short fingers, the overlapping grip is the best to adopt, while for the player with long fingers an interlocking grip may be better, though of the two the overlapping grip has the advantage of allowing the hands more play in unison and gives the player a better sense of touch. On no account should a grip be adopted which does not allow a flexible movement of the wrists which is essential to the distance of a shot.

As regards position of the feet when about to strike, there are really only two; one with the feet comfortably apart and at the necessary distance from the ball so as to allow the stroke to be made comfortably in a slightly bent but not cramped position, the ball being at right angles to the toes. In the second position the left foot is drawn back a little to the left. In no part of the body must the muscles be cramped or tense, flexibility is necessary.

The swing is not less important; with the eye on the ball, not on the club, it should be hit «straight in the face» so to speak, with a full even stroke from over the shoulder, never a jerky stroke, but with a swing which gradually increases in speed till the moment of impact. In swinging, the feet change position almost automatically with a little attention at first if the proper swing is given. With the club raised over the shoulder, the player faces or turns the body in the direction of the toe of the right foot raising the left heel from the ground, and with the swing finished he should be turned almost in the direction of the left toe with the right heel off the ground and the club pointing at an angle of about forty-five from the body.

(This is the second of a series of articles on golf. The next will be published in an early issue.)

Spain's Mineral and Medicinal Springs

It is a pity that the mineral and medicinal waters of Spain are not more widely known, for the Peninsula possesses at least as many mineral springs and as great a variety of medicinal waters as any other country in Europe. Some of them were known to the Romans, and the valuable qualities of others were discovered by the Arabs during their occupation of Spain; hence the name Alhama common to many of these Spas.

Spain has the advantage of being able to offer within a comparatively small territory every variety of climate; thus patients would be able to take their cures in the climate most suitable to each particular case.

From the «Guia de Bañerios» edited by the C. O. V. de Estudios Medicos we have taken the names of the most important spas, most of which have quite comfortable hotels and resting houses in the vicinity.

For stomach trouble: Sobrón in Avila, Cestona in Guipuzcoa, Solares Hoznayo in Santander; Mondariz, Guitiriz, Verin, Cabreiroa in Galicia; Fuente Caliente in Burgos; Hervidores de Cofrentes and Onteniente in Valencia; Los de Villaharta in Cordoba; Lanjaron in Granada.

For kidney and bladder trouble there are Corconte in Burgos; Alzola in Guipuzcoa; Belascoin in Navarre.

For lung diseases: Panticosa in Huesca; Ontaneda and Lierganes in Santander; Caldetas de Tuy in Galicia; Betelu in Navarre; Santa Teresa in Avila, besides those spas which have hot and sulphur springs from which direct and diffused inhalations can be made.

For rheumatism and arthritis there is an enormous group of thermal springs, the principal of which are: Molinar de Carranza in Vizcaya; al Hermida in Santander; Caldas de Cuntis Lugo and Molgas in Galicia; Tiermas, Fitero Nuevo and Fitero Viejo in Navarre; Bellus in Valencia; Alhama de Granada and Zujar in Granada.

For rickets and scrofula: La Toja and Arteijo in Galicia; La Muera in Vizcaya; Elgorriaga in Navarra; Medina del Campo in Valladolid; Paracuellos in Aragon.

For skin complaints: Ormaiztegui, Arechevaleta, Zaldivar and Villaro in the Basque country; Carvallo, Carballino, and Cortegada in Galicia; Alceda in Santander; and Fuente Podrida in Valencia.

For nervous disorders: Alanaje in Badajoz; Sacedon and la Isabella in Guadalajara and others of the oligometallic and radio-active class.

In Cataluña alone there are for digestive ills Vichy Catalan or Caldas de Malabella, Vallfogona and San Hilario; for rheumatism and arthritis, Caldas de Montbuy, Caldas de Estrach and La Garriga; for rickets and scrofula, Tona and the maritime sanatorium of Talasoterapia; for skin complaints, La Puda; for nerve diseases, Cardó and Santa Coloma de Farnes.

The above is just a selection of the thermal and other valuable medicinal springs which exist in Spain, recommended by the Spanish medical profession. Many of these spas are scarcely known outside the district in which they exist. Probably later when the government makes further research into the hidden wealth of Spain and when tourist propaganda is better organised and extended, some of these spas will be centres of popular health resorts in Europe.

When Bernhard Kellermann, the German novelist, was here last winter, he was less in the public eye than he might have been had he not been working hard on his new book. That book, Die Stadt Anatol, has now been published in Germany and has been acclaimed as his masterpiece. The Berliner Tageblatt, for example, says that in this work Kellermann has proved himself poet and economist as well as novelist, for he has done, even better than Upton Sinclair did in English, the story of Oil. He has given the entire romance, tragic and comic, of the effect of the discovery of petroleum in a backward nation.

Under the direction of Mrs. Robert Gavett, masons and painters have effected a complete change in the building opposite the English Tea Rooms in Terreno which will be known as The Terreno Shop. It has been entirely redecorated inside, and even the facade of the building has been given a coat of fresh white paint. To do this, Mrs. Gavett had to apply to the Ayuntamiento who, after due consideration, granted her permission. Mrs. Gavett will open her shop during the current week and one will be able to find there, hand knit sweaters; undies for all occasions; Christmas cards; tissues, ties and tags for holiday gifts; card tables that tuck away when not in use and a selection of arts and crafts which heretofore have not been seen on the Island.

Mr. John Gunther of the Vienna bureau of the Chicago Daily News, spent a very short holiday in Mallorca. Mrs. Gunther's friends here regret that she did not accompany him.

No War

Mr. Orton Bridge Motter gave the first of a proposed series of open forum lectures at the Sociedad Bellver on Friday, speaking on «America's War on the Criminal.» His conclusion, however, seemed to be that there was no war on the criminal.

The lecture, attended by between thirty and forty listeners, gave the impression that the United States is doing nothing except in isolated instances to curb the gangster. His solution was social education, for he declared 60 per cent. of America's policemen have not a high school education. This is about as surprising as a statement that 60 per cent. of London's excellent police force are not public school boys.

The majority of the audience were English and although the subject might at first glance be thought to interest only Americans, the British contingent seemed to relish Mr. Motter's disclosures.
