FIESTA SPIRIT RULES PALMA

On the Island

By ELIZABETH DRURY

I hope you chose a good point of vantage yesterday, but perhaps the one that comes along unexpectedly is the best. I only knew I was to be there, and there I was, the only twentieth century touch in an eighteenth century scene. The quay and the steps leading to the water's edge were covered with a fine old carpet of mellow color. Three men costumed in bright red traditional robes of office, and carrying the accompanying emblems in wrought silver, stood on the steps nearest the water's edge. After them, the first to greet the President of the Republic of Spain were six lovely girls, from villages inland, in old Majorcan dresses — untouched by the modern spirit — of black brocade fitted basques, with full skirts of brightly colored brocade, headresses of rare old lace and net, carrying fans and wearing the centuries old family jewelry — carrings, heavy gold chains, bracelets of wrought gold, gold inlaid with fine pearls, and gold framing enamel set in diamonds. Each bore a huge bouquet of flowers which she presented to the President, who bent low over their hands in homage to their loveliness.

The señoritas were:

María Llompart and Catalina Rotger, of Inca; Antonia Mas and Magda Amer, of Manacor; Francisca and Catalina Puig, of Lluchmayor, and all were accompanied by the delegations from their respective cities.

Then the scene changed. I was almost crushed by the jam of photographers who rushed forward, and after extricating myself, and enjoying a bit the graciousness and spontaneity of the President, was whisked away in a little yellow car and landed in the City Hall much in advance of the procession. Waiting there in readiness were the

Golfer Escapes Death In Seeking Lost Ball; 2 Killed

LONDON — A Scotch golfer who remained in the rough of the Maidenhead golf course looking for a lost ball, escaped death from a lightning bolt which struck down the other three members of the foursome.

Two of his playing companions were killed instantly and the third was critically injured.

The foursome was playing in a spring thundershower.

Odds and Ends Gleaned from Palma's Fete for President

See complete program for today's entertainment of President Zamora on Page 3.

Whisperings of Royalist demonstrations were heard occasionally as Palma turned out en masse to welcome the President of the Second Spanish Republic. The whispers proved to be idle talk and spent themselves on the air—super-charged with a spirit of good-fellowship and loyalty.

The ancient political custom of baby-kissing persists. Many a fond mother glowed like a happy tomato as the President bestowed on the cheek of her offspring a resounding smack.

Those brilliant robes worn by public officials at the quay were patterned after the ancient Mallorquin formal state attire. They are only brought out on distinctly important occasions.

The school children had their part in the celebration when they lined the Caratera along the route to Bellver Castle and there cried out their welcome to their Chief Executive. It was one of the most poignant parts of the day's festivities.

Cafes pushed out far beyond their accustomed limits, tables and chairs being scattered over piazzas and sidewalks. Until long past the accustomed bedtime of most of the populace, the

French Theaters Set April 5 As Date Of Strike

PARIS. — Flaring once more into open rebellion, representatives of all French theaters, cinemas, music halls and variety houses, have set April 5 as the day for closing their doors in protest against the government's new amusement tax.

With the exception of the government subsidized theaters, every playhouse in the nation will turn out its lights, lock its doors and wait for the government to reconsider the terms of the amusement tax.

The question was believed settled early this week when cabinet leaders agreed to reconsider the tax. The strike committee, however, expressed renewed dissatisfaction when the proposed terms of the reduction were made known. The committee, which represents all the theaters of France, announced it was not satisfied with the proposed concessions of the government.

An ultimatum was delivered to the Chamber of Deputies fixing April 5 as the final time that the theaters would permit the negotiations to continue. Action in accordance with the theaters' demands must be taken before then, the ultimatum stated.

Meanwhile the Chamber's finance commission adopted a supplementary credit of 3,000,000 francs for the Paris Opera.

Picturesque Fete Marks Welcome To President

City folks, country folks, extranjeros, public officials, jostled one another, gaped open-mouthed, and joined in the shouts - -

VIVA LA REPUBLICA!!!

VIVA EL PRESIDENTE!!!

Seldom in her long and colorful history has this capital city seen a fiesta marked by more enthusiasm, more sheer joyousness, than that held yesterday in honor of His Excellency, don Alcalá Niceto Zamora.

The dawn of a perfect day found little knots of people already assembled along the quay. As the blood-red sun rose slowly over the eastern horizon they were joined by still others, until by 8 a. m. standing room was at a premium.

Long, rare's tail clouds streaked the sky and dipped into the sea. The crowd murmured restlessly. Had something happened?

Then sharp eyes saw a tiny red flag being raised over the look-out tower on Porto Pi, and a few seconds later a battery of cannons along the shore boomed out a 21-gun salute. The multitude broke into line.

The Steamers Ciudad de Barcelona and Ciudad de Alicante, loaded with sight-seers, pulled out from their moorings and steamed towards the approaching cruiser.

Three score fishing vessels — ranging from proud, gleaming engine-powered craft to the lowliest single masted sailing ships — were formed in two lines. All were decorated to the limit of their owners ability.

All were streamered with silken flags

Watch Out! Today Is April Fool's Day To Some People

Perhaps you will not find any coins glued to the sidewalk, nor and salt in your sugar bowl nor any telegrams announcing the death of a rich uncle.

But, nevertheless, this is All Fool's Day.

Several Mallorquins, asked if the day for Tom-foolery was observed on the Island, gazed blankly. So it is suspected that the celebration is not known here.

But perhaps the reporter's Spanish was just having it's usual stupefying effect on people who speak the lan-

Trans-Atlantic Fares To Be Cut 20 Percent

Conference Ok's American Plan Of Reductions

A 20 percent reduction in first and tourist-class Trans-Atlantic steamship rates was agreed upon by representatives of the international shipping conference. The reduction was in line with the plan advanced by American companies. The rates will go in effect in time for the summer tourist traffic. Third class rates are to be reduced 10 percent. Freight reductions will be considered later.

NEW YORK. — A general rate cutting war among trans-Atlantic steamship companies was freely predicted here as a result of further reductions being made by major transportation companies.

While a conference of the leading companies was in session for the purpose of fixing some rational and uniform reductions, the United States lines and the North German Lloyd lines announced rate slashes.

This was followed by similar and more drastic cuts by the White Star line. The Cunard line thereupon announced that it would follow suit and reduce its fares in the same proportion.

The conference continued in session utterly ignoring the announcements. But in shipping circles grave consternation was felt that a rate war might ensue which would be disastrous to the less stable companies—all of which were heavily hit by the falling off of international trade world travel.

The reductions range from 10 to 34 percent.

and bunting. Some of the tiny ones draped their fishing nets over the masts, and stuck wild-flowers in the meshes. The families and friends of the masters were jammed aboard.

At quarter speed, the Almirante Cervera made its stately way down the double lines of welcoming craft. Each ship, bow faced toward the center, turned in salute as the cruiser passed, and slowly followed into port.

The escort of destroyers came next in close formation, and outside the breakwater, spread fan-wise, and dropped anchor.

The crowd on the breakwater was deathly silent. The cheers from the fishing boats could be faintly heard. Every watcher strained his eyes toward the great, grey cruiser. It seemed to be barely moving. Where was he?

Finally they saw him. El Presidente himself.

hand eyes smiling was the man whom they all had come to see.

With one accord, there arose from fire-thousand throats a resounding shout. Its echoes reverberated from the hills beyond.

Viva la República!

Viva el Presidente!

There followed the usual helter skelter of docking. Every body bellowed orders at everybody else. The cruiser swung indecisively about. Small boats scattered in all directions. Sailors tugged and sweated. But finally it was done.

As the President set foot upon the gang-plank, the band swung into the National Anthem and 7,000 doves, in little coverts, were released. They rose, circled the thong as in salute, and streaked away toward Spain.

The President landed and made his way through the mass of humanity to the open carriage which awaited him. He was taken to the City Hall, conducted up the stairway and officially greeted by officials of the city in the sala de fiestas, that specially furnished room, reserved for state occasions.

A few moments later he appeared on the balcony and made a short speech to the assembled multitude below, who cheered him at every punctuation mark.

Next came the visit to Bellver Castle, and after that the luncheon at the Mediterráneo.

It was a twelve-course luncheon, replete with the oldest and rarest of Mallorquín wine, interspersed with fine vintages from the Continent. The feast lasted until late afternoon.

Then the official party clambered into motors and was whisked away over the winding roads to the upland cities of Sóller, Deyá and Valldemosa.

By 7 p. m. the Plaza de Cort was jammed with more people than the oldest residents could remember having seen there before. A Mallorquín orchestra played and the President made another appearance shortly before 8 p. m.

officials of many foreign countries, in high silk hats and formal clothes, and the tightly crowded Majorcans, anxious for a glimpse of their President.

In contrast to the bewildering applause of the populace, was the quiet, gay, air of expectation which prevailed at the Hotel Mediterráneo. Many of our extranjeros entertained groups of their friends at luncheon there, and were delighted to witness the sumptuous banquet tendered the President and his entourage.

An added bit of colour was furnished by Mrs. Julia Loomis, who was attired in a soft blue costume. The ensemble of blue and silver made a very charming picture.

Among those I did notice at the luncheon was Mr. James Blair Gilmore, retired commander of the U. S. Navy. He has been here since January and has become interested in all the cultural affairs of the Island, such as the Theater Guild, etc. Lately he has been motoring through the Island with his friends the Francis Fields of New York.

Commander Gilmore is a Virginian and a graduate of Annapolis. Here in Mallorca the commander has become a complete convert. His plans for the future include all manner of interesting side-trips, but he does not think of leaving the Island, just yet.

Staying at the Mediterráneo is Mrs. Mabel Evenett, of London, and her pretty blond daughter, Miss Zwenna Evenett. They are leaving for England rather reluctantly, in about two weeks, to entertain some friends on a motor cruise which they had planned before coming to Majorca. Those knowing the charms of house boat parties along the Thames near Henley, however, cannot blame them for leaving even Majorca.

Although Mrs. Norman Jacobsen was called away suddenly to Sóller to rehearse the ceas for the Theater Guild play, "The Dover Road", the luncheon which she had arranged for a few friends yesterday went merrily on. Mrs. Jacobo Sureda; one of the guests, officiated as hostess to Mme. Lene Scheneider-Kainer, Mr. Bernard Kellerman, (author of "La Tunnel" and "The Sea"), and Mr. Jacobo Sureda. Mr. Sureda, as many of you know, comes from one of the old Majorcan families, is an artist and poet. To come to my point, however, I rather envy the party the opportunity they had to see Mr. Jacobsen's paintings of Bali. These studies were made last year and have to be seen in the right sort of light to be properly appreciated.

The tennis finals came off at the scheduled time yesterday afternoon, and an interested group saw Señor Tomeu

Still Other Things We Want to Know

Who the young woman is who bought 9,00 pairs of shoes in Artá, at 9 pesetas a pair, to sell in Hollywood.

Will a certain portrait now in the course of completion by one of our Artists, allegedly depicting one of our Island favorites, be more of a successful representation than many a better known painter could have produced? Or don't you understand?

Was the young English lady from Barcelona entirely misinformed by her companion regarding the last lines of the popular ditties on the Jack Hylton phonograph records at Victor's.

Who, we want to know, is going around town, and all around the Island for that matter, debunking the best story we have had for months?

The story was something about a Pollensa kitchen. According to the story and in the course of some unnamed disagreement, a man pushed a woman into a well, and the woman screamed so loudly that the man had to pull her up to keep the peace.

The debunker says simply that it is all a dog and cat affair, and that the dog chased the cat into the well. The woman in the case did not scream for her own sake, but on account of the cat. And the screaming continued because the cat would not get into the full bucket that was lowered by a Pollensa gentleman. She bided her time in the bottom until a broom was offered to her.

The debunker adds that the man, the woman and the cat are doing well. The dog is in disgrace.

Calafell win over Señor Pedro Salas. The scores were: — Calafell, 6-4; 6-1; 6-1; Salas, 8-6.

Sr. Salas played very well and rather lightheartedly in the beginning, winning the second set from Sr. Calafell, but he lost many an opportunity to make brilliant plays. Sr. Calafell played a much steadier game throughout.

Onlookers were the usual tennis enthusiasts, and the group included Dr. Edith Burley, of Scotland, and her daughter Miss Edith Burley, Miss Lillian J. Greve, close friend of Miss Burley; Dr. Cervera, Sr. Juan Morey, Sr. Jaime Civera, Señoritas Mary and Katy Rosselló, and Celia and Tita Bosch, Miss Else Küsterko, Sr. Francisco Salvá y Font, Baroness de la Bruyère, Mrs. Beutersak, Captain Trigoyeu, and Captain Sampol.

The open match for the Palma championship will be held next month.

CHINESE ROUT ENEMY FORCES

Japanese Desert Max Leaves For More Sidelights Peace Confab Title Bout - On Fiesta In Anger

SHANGHAI — Chinese forces continued their victorious advance in Manchuria, reaching the outskirts of Changeun, the recently proclaimed capital of the new Manchurian (Japanese) state.

Prince-President Pujis and his family fled the city when it appeared it might fall immediately. He and his family were reported under the protection of Japanese authorities at Mukden.

Chinese troops also succeeded in capturing several branch lines of the Japanese controlled South Manchuria railway.

Meanwhile Japanese delegates at the peace conference in session here walked out and refused to consider peace proposals further until the Chinese have ceased their advances. The Chinese point to the fact that the Japanese refused to cease their victorious drives of a month ago pending peace negotiations.

Many Chinese shops which re-opened during the temporary cessation of hostilities have closed again in fear of violence from the Japanese. A general exodus of Chinese from Japanese occupied territory has begun in fear of renewed struggle.

The Japanese military leaders have ordered reinforcements of heavy artillery and have brought up new troops to all menaced sectors.

Greece Fails To Pay Domestic Debt

ATHENS.—Finance Minister Maris has announced that Greece will not be able to meet either the interest payments nor the amortization of its internal loans, now due, for at least twelve months.

Foreign debts which fall due today, are to be paid promptly, Premier Venizelos announced. The Premier stated, however, that unless the League of Nations Council is more lenient with Greece than the League Finance Committee has recommended, the nation will not be able to fulfill further obligations—either foreign or domestic.

Shortage of gold and economic pressure have combined to precipitate a grave crisis in the nation, the Premier stated.

HAMBURG — Max Schmeling world's heavyweight boxing champion, sailed for the United States aboard the Hamburg American Liner New York to prepare for his coming championship bout with Jack Sharkey.

Schmeling's departure attracted only slight attention among his compatriots. Only a few of his personal friends were at the pier to see him off.

The big fellow expressed the customarily modest belief of champions that he would win the bout hands down.

evening's gaiety persisted.

More electric lights than many of the residents of the island have ever seen made of Palma at night a spectacle of dazzling brilliance. The City Hall at Plaza de Cort was strewn with bulbs and shone like a Hollywood cinema palace.

A shortage of cigarettes descended on those estancos whose owners had not sufficient foresight to prepare for the unprecedented crowds. One prospective buyer reported that he walked his long legs down to stumps before he finally found an estanco which could supply his nicotinic needs.

Country people and extranjeros who failed to observe the Palman custom of walking on the right-hand sidewalks found themselves jostled and stared at all day long. There were so many of them, however, that traffic could not move with its accustomed placidity.

Two persons were supposed to have been pushed into the bay as an unprecedented crowd jammed the quay for the reception. There were no fatalities, and the police had no report of the accidents.

There was also that American lady who sent in a buttoniere and her card to the President at his Mediterraneo luncheon, instructing the bell-boy that she expected no answer. She was thrilled a few moments later when the bell-boy returned with a gracious note and an autograph from His Excellency.

The launch pilot who took the President ashore cut some plain and fancy capers before hand the benefit the assembled multitude, much to the consternation of the pilots of several small boats, who narrowly missed being rammed. The pilot finally did ram one, peeling paint and bringing down curses on his head.

League Diplomat Dies in Plane

BAGDAD.—Colonel Dereynier, prominent Swiss diplomat, and two other persons were killed when a French airplane on the regular Damascus to Bagdad run crashed in the midst of a terrific sandstorm.

The airplane carried no wireless, and therefore did not receive warnings flashed from Bagdad of the storm.

The accident occurred about 200 miles from here. The bodies of the victims were brought in by military planes which conducted a wide search when the plane failed to arrive on schedule.

Colonel Dereynier was chairman of the League of Nations Commission appointed to iron out the Iraq-Syria border disputes. He was well-known in diplomatic circles and an expert on Asia Minor political questions.

Summer Arrives at HOTEL VICTORIA
Terreno, on the Bay of Palma

The gaiety, the lightness, that comes with the arrival of the Majorcan summer, is to be found at Hotel Victoria.

This smart hostelry has facilities for bathing, it makes boating convenient for its clients — there is even a miniature quay to facilitate private yacht landing at the Victoria's bayside.

GRAND HOTEL
Central in Palma

Under the same management... Renowned as the hotel whose excellence brought Majorca its first fame.
