On the Island

Mrs. Anna Higgins and her daughter Miss Florance Higgins returned to the Island the other day with Miss Emily Blackstone Camp from a trip of several weeks in northern Africa. But the manner of their return was different from any other return.

Mrs. Higgins and her daughter had a nice little schedule all worked out by which they were to return to The States. The first link was taking the Djmila out of Algiers to Palma. But that link was missing. That is, the taxi which brought the three travellers to the boat arrived just at the minute the gang plank was dropped on the pier. They thought for a moment of jumping the small distance to the boat, but gave that up.

In desperation they called to have the boat stopped, then they searched the waterfront for some craft in which they could catch the rapidly disappearing Djmila, but their efforts availed them nothing. They were left.

They made all possible inquiries about planes, about sailboats, about any boats which intended or could be induced to put out for Palma. But there was nothing.

There was one little steamer which would tramp over to Barcelona in a day or so, they were told, but they were warned it wasn't much of a boat.

In it the three weary travellers finally arrived in Barcelona at one-thirty Thursday afternoon, and since that was the day of fiesta, they found they could not so much as buy a ticket to Palma—there was nothing to do but sit around

World News Coming Events Briefs

In LONDON, the populace was filled with sentimental glee on the announcement that Flyers J. A. Mollison and Miss Amy Johnson were engaged to be married. In the midst of the excitement newspapers projected for the couple new adventures in joint world-girdling.

In Moscow, the Soviet Union, after having dispatched the proper notes of condolence to the French Republic on the death of their President, sent a more cogent note objecting to the French interpretation of the crime. The Soviets said they did not like some of the statements of the French-controlled Havas News Agency, since they tended to place the blame for the killing of Doumer on the Third Internationale.

In LONDON, the ministry of labor issued its regular statement showing that there were 9,484,000 insured persons (16 to 64) at work in Great Britain as of April 25. This was the equal of the year before, 65,000 less than the month before, said the ministry.

In LONDON, Covent Garden opened its season with a performance of the Meistersinger conducted by Sir Thomas Beecham. Singing the leading roles were Lotte Lehmann, Friedrich Schorr,

May 15, 16, 17 — Series of concerts by symphony orchestra of Madrid, led by two guest conductors, Alexandre Tansman and Bartolomé Samper. Many musicians of note will take part in various concerts, including Mr. George Copeland, American pianist.

22 Communists in Polish Courts

WARSAW — Fascism in action was seen here with the opening of the trial of 22 leaders of the Socialist party, on charges of being in conspiracy with Moscow.

The particular party to which the accused belong is that of the Socialists of the Left, which is a split-off from the officially tolerated Socialists of Poland.

In the course of the second day of the trial great sums of money were mentioned by the prosecution as having been received by the party leaders from Moscow to bring about the Polish revolution.

The trial has become a center of considerable interest in Poland, particularly in light of the fact that many Poles have been swinging toward the political left, and that the whole Silesian area has been going Communistic much to the disgust of the Polish officials.

Walkover Vote as Painlevé Withdraws

PARIS — Albert Lebrun became President of the Republic of France here when the national assembly met cast 633 votes in his favor out of a total of 777.

The socialist candidate, Paul Faure, who was the only opponent running against the former President of the Senate, polled only 114 votes, and the rest were spoiled either through being marked for Painlevé or for some other reason.

The election which took place during the night was a foregone conclusion after the retirement of Paul Painlevé from the race.

This retirement was not of his own volition, but because the majority of parties agreed among themselves on Lebrun to avoid contesting an election at this time.

Painlevé, however, did not willingly give up the race for the presidency.

In a statement made at the time of his retirement from the competition he said that many deputies desired to forestall possibility of dissension between the new President of the Republic, who was to be elected by the departing chamber, and the new chamber whose political complexion was considerably different, had asked him to stand for the office in order to facilitate the transition from old chamber to the new.

That this was not the opinion of many republican senators was obvious, he added, and therefore he felt himself constrained to withdraw.

Zeppelin Akron Endangered

FORT WORTH, Texas. — Anxious officials have flashed the word to all the air observatories of this section to be on the lookout for the giant airship Akron, which ran directly into a storm area and disappeared.

The severity of the thunderstorm which has lashed this state is partly responsible for the fears of airport officials here.

The great ship, the biggest zeppelin in the world, is in perfect condition according to U. S. Navy men waiting to greet her here, and they insist she is adequately equipped to weather any meteorological disturbance short of a hurricane.

Plane, Transfixed by Lightning, Escapes

Heroic Pilot Takes Great Ship out of Storm

CROYDON. — Transfixed by a bolt of lightning, the giant air liner Horatius returned here safely, and the passengers and crew immediately boarded another ship to go on through the same storm to Paris.

The hero of the safe landing of the big ship was the veteran Pilot Captain Jones, one of the line's most experienced men.

When he was 2000 feet in the air over Kent on the way to Paris flying through a heavy storm which prevented him seeing anything, there was a blinding flash and an explosion.

But the swift passage of the current injured none of the ship's inmates. All the cockpit windows were blown out, compass and radio equipment were ruined, and there was slight damage to two of the propellers.

To avoid a panic, the pilot wrote a note on a piece of paper asking all the people to keep their seats, assuring them he would fly back to Croydon.

With his passengers reassured Captain Jones wheeled the great 38-seater around and started back toward Croydon without benefit of compass in the midst of the heavy storm.

Miraculously he brought the ship safely to rest on the field at Croydon.

Immediately he transferred the whole thirteen who had started with him to another plane and took off into the same storm which had nearly brought the Horatius down from the skies.

Among those who thus showed their willingness to take a second chance were several women.

Examination of the Horatius here revealed that repair of the damage will be a comparatively simple matter.

The ship is a part of the Imperial Airways Fleet, and is one of the largest ever built.

What is Mallorca Destined to be?

By "AMERICAN TOURIST"

As a tourist I abhor all other tourists. Having no occupation, I detest the idlers who swarm in the hotels. As a lover of the native local color, I shudder at the impending ruin of Palma.

In one of the narrow native streets of Pollensa, a young woman swaggers down the road in pajamas. In a Palma tramcar another young woman drops into the front seat and stretches her feet out on the opposite seat, exposing eighteen inches of stockingless shin to the horrified gaze of Mallorcans, accustomed to the decorous dress and modest demeanor of their own women.

These are only specimens of a hundred instances of the sort which greet the eye of any visitor. Even when I drive as discreetly as I can about the island I am ashamed of the discord of a modern car in the ancient countryside. We tourists are at best a blot on the landscape. We are a splash from a house-painter's brush on the mellow canvas of some old master.

What can Palma do about it? If General Weyler could be recalled to life his experiences in Cuba might be of service to the authorities. He might confine all tourists to concentration camps, allowing only brief tickets of leave for emergency business at the Borne. And a tax of 100 percent on all purchases and local expenditures would be especially effective. A part of the Terreno might be designated as a ghetto for the isolation of all foreign tourists, where they could exercise their vulgarity and snobbishness on one another, without offense to the uniform courtesy and patience of the native population.

By L. E. PEASE

Permit me a rejoinder to a letter appearing in your May 7 edition.

The "political trouble which has destroyed the peace of the Island" and the "Bolshevik meetings, strikes, and general disorder all over Spain" need not alarm the English, Americans, and Germans in this controversy, if they still read an occasional paper from home. No later than May 3 we read in a London daily the headlines, "Home Office Plans to Deal With Crime Increase", and U. S. citizens are wondering how the police force is to cope with the gangsters, while a recent report from Germany gives the Hitlerites attacking a town, resulting in the serious wounding of several young Republicans. Indeed, I would suggest that the police of these three countries, "until law and order prevails among the Spanish politically" try to arrange for an exchange with the Spanish "over-worked police"—particularly in Majorca—as a way of getting in a vacation.

It is a sign of progress that the Spanish workmen are striving to raise

By JOHN D. STEELL

Replying to the objections raised against my first letter, I hope Miss Newton will forgive me if I insist that my intimate knowledge of the Spanish mentis is such as to place me in a position of advantage in an endeavor to bring home to visitors to Mallorca the fact that there is another side to the question, and that the old adage "When in Rome, do as the Romans do" holds good also in Mallorca.

Please, dear Miss Newton, do not imagine that I am an old "kill-joy". By all means, let the Bright Young Things be bright, the brighter the better. I am wholeheartedly and unconditionally in favor of beach pyjamas — ON THE BEACH. I am also quite in agreement with her that, to most Englishmen, bull-fighting is, as Shakespeare has it, "a bloody business".

I contend that, as things are at present, Mallorca does hold other attractions for the indecently-clad people to whom I have referred; these consist of the apparent lack of restrictions on their indecency, of which they take advantage, parading the streets and frequenting cafés in translucent beach-suits a things which they jolly well dare not do in any small town in England. So why do it here?

I also contend that Mallorca is still a haven of peace, compared with what is happening in other parts of the Bolshevik disorders at a political meeting in England, and nobody can say that strikes are unknown in our own country. So why criticize such events in Spain, and particularly Mallorca, where up to the present, any discomfort due to strikes has been microscopic.

Again, the presence of hotel thieves can only be put down to the arrival of greater numbers of people who take pride in flaunting their wealth before a race less fortunate, or more scrupulous, in the accumulation of worldly goods.

However, I venture to suggest that all such comparisons as those made by the correspondent in question are odious, and quite beside the point. Their standard of living, as our own workmen have done, and about time to drop the silly business of hurling "Bolshevik" at others of different political theories, which term applied by a mad young fascist to the whole of France, has just resulted in a terrible national tragedy. To one who was in Spain before and during her Revolution, an example of order and moderation unmatched in history, this little over a year of stabilizing her government, increasing her educational facilities, and catching up with the times, is most inspiring.

The "revolting spectacle of the bull-fights" most visiting foreigners rightly deplore, but let us not forget our own revolting spectacles of the prize fight and "blood sports" of stag and fox hunting.

Exhibit Here of Photography

In the brilliant joint exhibition which has just opened at Galerías Costa, the young French girl Mlle. Hélène de Marguerie shares honors with Arthur Edward Middlehurst whose architectural sketches have drawn such wide attention.

Mlle. de Marguerie is showing photographic portrait studies which she has developed into a strikingly modern art in the course of her work in Paris.

She has been a student of her subject for three years, during which time she studied all of the technical side of her art, including developing and printing which are not ordinarily supposed to be a part of the photographer's duties.

The studies displayed by Mlle. de Marguerie are done in the strikingly modern style which has made fine photography in recent years one of the recognized arts.

The work shows the effects of the artist's study under Man Ray, the American in Paris who has done so much to advance photography in his many experiments.

Mlle. de Marguerie is the daughter of an American mother and a French father. She came to Mallorca a short while ago with both her mother and grandmother.

Intending to stay some time, she is opening up a studio at Calle Sagrera, 7 in Palma.

She speaks English, French and German and now plans to master Spanish on the Island.

and quite beside the point.

The point I wish to drive home is that Mallorca can be developed, either as winter resort, or as an all-year round peaceful refuge for tired business men, and others looking for a restful spot in which to pass a holiday, a season, or longer period. As such it sprang into fame, and as such it should continue, undefiled by the lewdness of the ultra-modernists who, when all is said and done, can, if they wish, practice their strange cult in places reserved specially for it.

Due both to the length and the irrelevance of some of the communications received by this office, they have been cut. In any case however, their salient features are left. The Editors

Rescuers Upturn New Victims In Search

LYONS. — Six corpses were pulled out from the wreckage of rocks and mud which is all that is left of the two six-story houses crushed by an avalanche here.

The new deaths bring the total known killed up to 32, and it has been found by the rescuers that 26 remain imprisoned while frantic efforts go on to save them.

Eduard Herriot, mayor of this city, who nearly lost his life in aiding the rescue work, has remained on the scene of the catastrophe.

Efforts of the volunteers have been hindered by the continual falling of further debris from the overhanging cliff, and by the danger that another landslide might fall and entomb them all.

For this reason, operations were stopped for many hours while the shells were fired into the cliff to precipitate the loose earth onto the ground.

New earth piled on top of the old increased the difficulty of digging down to the prison which holds the remaining victims of the landslide. In consequence the directors of the rescue work believe that there is slight chance of the remaining 26 being found alive.

Their feeling is intensified by the fact that those who have been brought out alive were so badly crushed and suffocated that a day or two more would surely have spelled death. The six corpses, too, gave an indication of the impossibility and the difficulty with which human life could sustain itself under the wreckage of the houses. All of them were mangled, some of them beyond recognition.

Despite these adverse reports, the rescuers kept up their work, firmly convinced that at least one life saved would reward their efforts.

The demolished houses were not located in Lyons proper, but the suburban village of Caluire.

Tardieu Will Resign at Inauguration

PARIS — André Tardieu will resign the minute the new President takes office, it is understood here, though it is understood he will continue with the duties, if asked, until the new chamber can meet to elect a premier.

Political circles admit no influence of the assassination of President Paul Doumer on the possibility of the Tardieu government remaining in power.

It is thought that the fact of the old "Tardieu chamber" having elected the President will influence the new one to drop conservatism more completely and indulge the desires of the newly-strong parties of the left.

HOTEL VICTORIA

Terreno, on the Bay of Palma

The gaiety, the lightness, that comes with the arrival of the Majorcan summer, is to be found at Hotel Victoria.

This smart hostelry has facilities for bathing, it makes boating convenient for its clients — there is even a miniature quay to facilitate private yacht landing at the Victoria's bayside.

GRAND HOTEL

Central in Palma

Under the same management... Renowned as the hotel whose excellence brought Majorca its first fame.
