Prosecutor Appeals Against Acquittal of Five Americans

THE military prosecutor has appealed to the supreme court in Madrid against the acquittal of the five Americans on a charge of attacking a Guardia Civil. Consequently, until the higher court renders its decision, the five must keep their bail posted and may not leave the country, as at least two of them had planned to do.

One of the reasons given for the appeal is that the court martial which tried them was divided in its decision, and voted by a majority of only one to acquit.

The appeal comes as a blow to the defendants who had supposed that once the verdict was handed down, that was the end of it. Ruthford Fullerton had planned to leave almost at once, and Walter Blodgett was to depart soon. Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Lockwood and Roderick Meade were remaining for a time, in any case.

One point of relief for them in the present situation is that there will be no question of a jail sentence, even if the supreme court does order a new trial. However, those in a position to know believe that the highest tribunal is sure to reject the military appeal.

The court does not have the power to revise the decision or impose any penalties. It may merely choose between affirming the verdict as it stands and ordering a new trial. In the unlikely event that a trial is ordered, it must take place in Madrid, and all the evidence would have to be heard again.

On Wednesday evening Don Luis Ramallo, whose brilliant defense was largely instrumental in winning the acquittal verdict at the trial, left Palma for a short visit to his family on the mainland. He was planning to be in Madrid for a day or two at the end of this week or early next, when he would take up the case of his clients. He expressed confidence that there would be no new trial, but he was not prepared to say how long it would be before the supreme court handed down its decision.

Disbelief that the case will be brought again to trial is expressed in spite of the fact that the Supreme Court has accepted the appeal as made by Don Ricardo Mulet, fiscal in Palma. It is pointed out that the court is a civil body, and will not be anxious to emphasize a situation which provoked ill feeling between Spain and the United States, and would doubtless be the subject of more misunderstanding if reopened.

Course of Spanish Revolution Hinges on Sunday's Voting

SPAIN'S first Cortes to be elected under the republican Constitution will be chosen next Sunday in accordance with the enormously complicated electoral law and by an electorate which is more than half feminine.

As the campaign has progressed, the apparent confusion of parties and issues has been rather bewildering, especially to those who have been accustomed to party politics on the English or American rather than the French model. The great number of parties, many of them purely local and concerned primarily with regional problems, has added to the inevitable complications naturally attendant upon the birth of a new political order.

Because the Spanish revolution has been peaceful, one is inclined to forget that it has been no less real. The establishment of a new regime is never a simple affair. The issues which next Sunday's balloting will decide, so far as it is possible to decide such matters by elections, are of fundamental importance and of the usual complexity.

In the maze of parties it is often difficult, and usually unprofitable, for the foreigner to grasp the distinctions between them. No one of them will be in power when the new Cortes meets. The Government of the future, like those of the past and of today, will be a coalition.

Consequently the campaign boils down to a contest between the parties of the Right and the parties of the Left. And the differences between the two main factions are easier to comprehend than the finer variations of their component parts. In general it may be said that all of them accept the Revolution; the political strength of out and out monarchists on the one side and of communists on the other is negligible. The basic appeal to the voter, therefore, concerns the direction the Revolution shall now take. The Left, which has been guiding the Republic's destinies, seeks a mandate to continue the building of Spain's new social order along the lines already marked out. The Right holds that the Revolution has gone far enough—that it is now time to halt and consolidate the gains of the Republic within conservative limits.

The issues on which the two great bodies of political thought divide, fall into two main groups. One is concerned essentially with property—the question of confiscation, of agrarian reform, of settlement of industrial disputes which affect the productivity of industry. The second group is embodied in the religious question, since this contains also the problem of education.

The parties of the Left, which controlled the constituent Cortes during its lifetime, are standing very largely on their record in the two years of Revolution. They point to improvements in the army, in education, in religious laws, labour legislation and agrarian reform. They acclaim the plan of regional autonomy, which they say strengthens Spain. They propose to continue this programme.

Concretely it proposes a system of minimum wages, holidays of from one to three weeks per year for workers, abolition of child labour, technical schools for workmen, cultivation of new agricultural products such as cotton and tobacco on a large scale, repeal of taxes on salaries and increased levies on unproductive capital, dividends and inheritances. State ownership of public utilities is another of their aims, as is a programme of ownership of the land by those who cultivate it.

In Cataluña, many of the parties are represented by purely Catalan equivalents. The Socialists work with the Catalan Esquerra; former Premier Azaña's party with the Acción Catalana, etc.

The parties of the Right, despite a multiplicity of ideas and principles, are united in certain fundamentals, particularly opposition to the regime which they term Socialist.

They are pledged to repeal or to sweeping amendment of the religious laws so as to keep the State from interfering with Church schools (the Lefts insist on all teachers, lay or clerical, having a State license). They declare the labour legislation in giving too great privileges to workmen, harms both capital and labour by driving the investor's money and industrial initiative into hiding. They promise an agrarian reform which will not deprive the large landowner of his holdings.

These are the issues which the election will decide, although it is not to be inferred that arguments on these points are what most influence the voters. As everywhere else, the ballots will be cast for men and ideals rather than for parties and specific political issues.

The outcome, which will not be known until the day after election—the system of voting prevents the almost instantaneous verdict of the English and American polls—will be largely due to the women. For the first time they are participating in a national election, and the qualified women voters slightly outnumber the men.

Water in the Bay

Anyone casting a casual glance towards the port of Palma this week might have been amazed at the phenomenon of large ships resting, to all appearances, upon a bank of mud. The situation, however, was not quite so bad as it appears.

The unusually heavy rains of the week had transformed normally dry river beds into torrents which poured in unending muddy streams down to the clearer waters of the bay and left a well defined brown channel that reached almost as far as Porto Pi.

Beyond the interruption of tram services, there was little damage in Palma from the storms. Genova cars and others on the Porto Pi line were stopped, as were some of the services to Son Roca and La Soledad.

The effects of the storm were more severe in other parts of the Island. The road near Manacor was inundated so that traffic could not pass. The railroad to Santany was blocked and service from Palma to Sóller and the Port of Sóller suspended.

A WOMAN OF SPAIN — URRACA

(The Republic has given Spanish women the vote, but they did not need it to play important roles in the history of their country. In a series of sketches, of which the one that follows is the first, a few details of the lives of some of these women will be given. Most of them, as will be seen, did not call themselves feminists. They simply did their immediate duty as they saw it to be done.)

THERE is a true story which begins like an old-fashioned fairy-tale: once upon a time there was a king who had three fine sons and two beautiful daughters, and the older daughter loved the bravest knight in her father's kingdom. Unfortunately the story does not continue in the fairy-tale vein, but even in the cold light of historic fact it remains romantic. The king was Fernando the Great of Castille and León, who had created an united kingdom by years of fighting and statesmanship. But his paternal affection was stronger than his worldly wisdom, and on his death he divided his country again, that all his children might wear royal crowns. To his three sons, García, Alfonso and Sancho, he gave equal shares of land, and to his daughters Urraca and Elvira he gave a fortified city each.

Thus do families part and civil wars begin. The brothers quarrelled among themselves, each thinking that the others had too large a share, but scarcely had a triangular warfare broken out when they cast greedy eyes on Elvira's city of Toro. Uniting temporarily against their sister, they marched to the attack, and so frightened her that without making any effort to defend her rights, she surrendered her city and became again only a royal princess living the dull life of a mediaeval court.

Encouraged by so easy a conquest, two of the brothers now turned their attention to Urraca. That queen sat in her palace on the walls of Zamora, looking out over the miles of fertile plain that surround the city. Tradition says she chose that window, whose empty frame still crowns the highest point of Zamora's crumbling walls, because from it she could look down on the little rural chapel of Santiago, where once she had gone at dawn to buckle on the armour of a new-made knight after his vigil before its altar. The knight's name was Rodrigo Diaz, and he had turned away from her royal love to marry Ximena, his lifelong sweetheart.

Why has no modern psychologist been drawn to study this tale? Much remains of the scene, even today. There are documents in plenty, and there is a wealth of tradition, that imaginative flower that grows from the hypnotized seed, as though in an eastern conjuror's work. One may stand where the boyish Cid knelt all night before the square altar-table of Santiago while the grotesque sculptures brooded on the arch above his head, and try to recapture the tone of his dreams of love and glory.

At all events, Urraca proved herself a worthy daughter of her brave and wily father. The warlike dustcloud rolled across the plain, and came to rest before the walls of her city. Proudly she waited in her palace. Then came news of an emissary from her brothers, offering terms. She called together the lords and ladies of her court, and sat on her throne among them in royal state. Crowned and regal, she waited to receive the messenger of the brothers who wanted to rob her of her patrimony and make her only an appendage of their court. The great doors opened, and into the throne-room, of which only a few broken walls now remain, came the hero of her youth, a hero now to thousands, but to her no more than the mouthpiece of shameful terms of surrender.

She received the great Cid with dignity, and sent back by him a few brief words that breathed only faith in her walls and their defenders. Then she called a council. One of her staunch supporters was a man called Bellido Dollfus. Some of our modern writers call him traitor, some call him patriot. The only thing certain is that he was devoted to his liege lady, devoted to blindness as to means and ends. His plan was adopted.

A few days later, the besieged town saw its queen come from her palace in all her most stately robes. To the walls she went, to an out-jutting tower that stands there still above a green little park of modern days. In a clear voice she asked a parley. Heralds came in answer, but she, the queen, would treat with none but a king. Finally came Sancho, the weakest of the brothers in character, though not in body. Urraca appealed to old affection, to right, to reason, and at last she lowered her voice, pleading the weakness of a woman. Sancho came nearer, the boldness of his manner, as of his terms, increasing at what he supposed to be a sign of yielding. In the postern gate beneath the tower was an eyelet, long and narrow to suit a bowman. Behind it, with arrow bent to the string of his bow, stood Bellido Dollfus.

He thought nothing then, or probably after, of the judgment of future generations. His lady was menaced, all generous means had been tried, and in his hands lay the fate of many. He drew his bow to the notch, and as Sancho, brazenly sure of his power, came within range, the whistle of an arrow broke the quiet of parley.

No one knows what Urraca thought, no one knows or has dared to conjecture with what mixed emotions she saw her brother fall. The fact remains that the armies drew away bearing the body of one of their leaders, to renew internecine war on other fields; that Elvira led her life in meek subjection to her brothers, and that Urraca reigned long and undisturbed in her loyal city of Zamora. Rodrigo Diaz, in his arrogance, could force the brother Alfonso to take humiliating oaths denying his connivance in the death of Sancho. (The city of Burgos still shows the holy objects by which he swore.) Bellido Dollfus could bear the mingled weight of his strange good and ill fame. Urraca ruled alone, a good and kindly queen of her little kingdom. She took no consort, left no descendants, lived and died for her city of Zamora, and the little city remembers her yet. Eight centuries have gone by, but one can even now look through the frame of her window and see the chapel of Santiago, and the great Cid, for all his glory, never trod Zamora's streets in triumph. A Spanish proverb says «Zamora was not gained in a single hour». Nor ever, when Urraca was queen, add her people.

Insularities

By Mildred Willis Harris

IN a place the size of Puerto Pollensa the carabinieri, though they may lack evidence, generally have a pretty shrewd idea of just which citizens live well within the law, and which do not. One such, whom they had long suspected of connection with the profitable trade of running contraband tobacco, they observed sitting alone night after night in the cafes, while all his former friends made merry at adjoining tables. Feeling that they might profit by a feud between the contrabandistas, they watched developments alertly, and when an opportunity arose, made cautious overtures.

The man at first proved surly, and was not inclined to talk but gradually, as all his friends continued to exclude him from their gatherings, he dropped veiled hints which interested his questioners. One night, he signalled covertly for them to follow when he left the pub, and when he met them on a lonely stretch of road, revengefully he whispered certain information which concerned a shipment of tobacco his former friends expected that night.

Forewarned and jubilant, the carabinieri gathered on the beach near Formentor. As their informant had predicted, a ship with certain lights appeared. Small boats put off from her, and made for land. Impatiently, the agents waited in their hiding place until the cargo had been brought ashore. Then they swooped down upon it and started hacking open crates and boxes. At first they were surprised to find them filled with coal, but that is an old dodge among the contrabandistas, so they kept bravely on until at dawn they opened the last box and found its contents, too, inoffensive coal.

Next day, to their chagrin, they learned that a large shipment of tobacco had landed at Alcudia the night before. But that was nothing to their rage when they discovered that their informant and his friends were celebrating, in one merry group, and drinking toasts to one more happy landing.

The Gallant

MAYBE we're just a silly sentimentalist, but Cinderella stories always pull our heart strings.

There was a Birthday Party recently, enlivened by all sorts of games and contests. In one of these, a friend of ours was pleased to learn that he was the prize winner. To his surprised embarrassment, he suddenly discovered that he was the owner of a Guinea Pig. Surprised embarrassment, however, is nothing to the feelings of the little pig.

Surrounded by the mirthful company, she was as shy as a Victorian debutante. Her past experiences in life offered no clue to what her conduct should be in this unprecedented situation. She was quite unprepared to solve the social problems that confronted her. What did she know, for instance, of the light badinage that keeps a supper partner's eye from wandering? What did she know of ball-room dancing... she who had seen neither waltz nor tango in her life? And when it came to drinking toasts, what could she do who knew no difference between Veuve Clicquot and a whisky high-ball?

But breeding tells, in Guinea pigs and men, and there had always been a lot of breeding in her family. Too proud to give way to protesting squeaks and squeals, as humbler Guineas might have done, she stood with down-cast eyes, abashed and maidenly. A kindly voice called to her, from a distant height. Her raised glance rested on her owner. She gazed at him with bright and wistful eyes, mutely admiring his gentleness and strength, and begging him for his protection.

Don Juan

The play Don Juan Tenorio is known to every Spaniard, and frequently quotations from it prove extremely apt. Last week, when Don Juan March escaped from the jail where he had been in residence for seventeen months, Luz published this quotation from the play: «I have opened the doors of this castle with my purse.»

Our friend, his chivalry appealed to by that poignant look, forgot his own embarrassment, and his protective instincts rushed to meet the frightened piglet's need. He raised the tiny creature in his arms and, sheltering her between his coat and heart, he vowed that from that day henceforth he would become a better and a nobler man, more worthy of his protegee's devotion.

Needless to say, this Cinderella's debut was a great success. There was fierce rivalry for her attention between her new protector and the other gentlemen, but she was adamant in her affections.

However, since her youth and inexperience in life make it unseemly that she join a bachelor's menage, she is the house guest now of Pee Wee, smallest dog in Spain, with whom she has already formed a deep and lasting friendship.

Dr. F. Gilbert Scott

With the death of Dr. Francis Gilbert Scott who succumbed to an attack of angina pectoris at his home, Calle Zaragoza, 32, Son Serra, last week, there passed away a well known figure in the British community in Palma.

He was born in London on October 5th, 1868 and was the son of the late Canon Thomas Scott, vicar of West Ham and latterly rector of Lavenham, Suffolk. Dr. Scott was a great-nephew of the late Sir George Gilbert Scott, the British architect, and a cousin of Sir Giles Gilbert Scott, the designer of the Liverpool Cathedral. The name Gilbert has come down through generations in the Scott family, who are direct descendants of Sir Humphrey Gilbert.

Dr. Scott was educated at Haileybury College and the London Hospital. He made a special study of mental and nerve cases but because of his failing health was advised to leave the inclement weather of England. Since his arrival on the Island in October, 1930, he took a great interest in local affairs, professional and social. He was particularly active in the formation of the Society of British Subjects in the Balearic Islands last year, and his great hobby was photography. Several books which have been written about Mallorca within the last couple of years are illustrated with photographs taken by Dr. Scott, and his exhibition at the Galerías Costa enjoyed a huge success.

The funeral was held last Monday and was attended by his brother, Mr. Thomas Scott, the British Vice-Consul, Commander Hillgarth; Mr. Lindo Webb, Mr. Henry Firbanks, Mr. F. G. Short and his son Morris, the Messrs. Park, Duncan, Piers, Street, Baldwin and Lang, and Commander H. B. Worsley. The Rev. John de B. Forbes conducted the services.

Dr. Scott is survived by his widow and small son, Thomas.

Birthday Party

The Season has officially begun in Palma with the first large party of the Winter which the Eyre Pinckards gave on Monday night. Since it was the celebration of Mr. Pinckard's birthday, the guests came dressed as members of the youngest generation. As a chubby, pink-cheeked baby, he was the recipient of many appropriate gifts. Mrs. Pinckard was a school-girl, in gingham dress with big bow on her hair. The Talcott Camps appeared as twins, with bibs and hoods and long white dresses, and Mrs. Lucinda Reichenbach, too, wore an infant's long, white, embroidered dress. Miss Jean McMillan, Mrs. Ronald Goetz, Mrs. Sidney Jackson, and Mrs. John Lowry all came dressed as school girls, while Mr. Matthew Mather and Mr. Geoffrey Holdsworth played the part of children's specialists. Mrs. Peggy Hadra, Mrs. Fulton Leser and the Baroness Bucovitch wore shorts effectively, as did Mrs. Manuel Texidor. Mr. Fritz Requardt was dressed up like a little Mallorquin girl. The professional entertainment was supplied by a band of gypsies.

There were some sixty guests in all, among them Mr. and Mrs. Donald Newhall, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gavett, Captain Ramonell, Sres. Ramon and Joaquín Torrella, Rafael de Lacy, and Francisco Salvà, Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Bowers, Mr. Huntington Harris, Mr. Walter Ogden, Mr. Bert Mullin.

Guardians of the Law

(This is the second of two articles describing the various police forces of Spain.)

The Policías secretas are the equivalent to plain clothes detectives, whose work is to investigate a crime that has already been committed, to trail the suspects, or to do undercover work to foil the plans of those whom they have reason to believe are plotting trouble.

They wear no uniforms and are identified by badges, worn inside their coats, and marked «Agente de Vigilancia». To become a member of the force it is necessary to pass examinations and then to spend some time in study in their special training school in Madrid.

In organization they are similar to the Guardia de Seguridad, and operate under the Director General de Seguridad from the Home Office in Madrid. Their rank, however, is superior. They are a mobile force, moved from one province to another as their work requires.

The Carabineros were organized to stop the entrance of contraband, especially tobacco, into Spain, and there is no exact record of their beginning. In 1799 they were reorganized as Resguardo General de Rentas, or tax collectors, and later Philip V gave them their present name. During the nineteenth century they served as a special army corps in many wars.

Their organization is military, and they serve under officers transferred to that service from the regular army. Their highest officer is a General. The men serve voluntarily, and are recruited either from the army or are trained in special schools for the sons of carabineros. There are three branches of the service, Infantry, Cavalry and Navy.

The carabineros come under the Department of Finance, and the Director General thus changes with each change of government. Although their work is largely in the interest of the tobacco monopoly, the carabineros are paid by the Government.

It is their duty to patrol the roads and coastlines and to stop the entrance of contraband. If, at their cry of «Alto!» a suspicious car refuses to stop, after the third order they can shoot. If death results, they are answerable for their conduct before a military court. They patrol all beaches, day and night and always go in pairs. They are empowered to stop suspicious people in the streets, or search your car at any time along the highways, but they are not permitted to search your home without a warrant. The matrons in the customs are usually relatives of members of the force.

Their uniform is green, with cap of the same colour, and they are armed with rifles and revolvers.

Information About London

The London office of THE MAJORCA SUN and SPANISH TIMES is at the disposal of readers who intend visiting or returning to England. They may have their mail addressed there, secure information or reserve hotel accommodations through the office, to which inquiries and requests may be sent direct. The address is 205 High Holborn, W.C. 1.

The Guardia civil has a long history, but its present form dates back less than a century when they were reorganized in order to combat the bandits who were making Andalusia unsafe for travelers. It was hazardous to attempt a journey through the South of Spain, because such bandit chiefs as José María («El Tempranillo») and Juan Candelas were terrorizing the whole countryside. Picked men were chosen for the Guardia civil, men whose integrity, whose courage and obedience would be above reproach, and these drove out the bandits.

The standards for the Guardia civil are very high. The men are chosen after rigid tests from the regular army, or are trained in a special school for the sons of Guardias. The rules and regulations are the most severe of any organization in Spain. Men in the service are on duty every hour of the day, that is, if there is any trouble they must lend their aid. They never are permitted to appear without their uniform, and their deportment must at all times be exemplary.

They take their orders from the Minister of the Interior, Home Office, in Madrid, but in the provinces they are at the disposition of the Civil Governor. Their chief is a ranking army officer, who changes with a change of Government. The Guardia Civil can be employed in any section of the country, and shifted anywhere in case of need. Their ordinary uniform is olive green, with yellow leather shoulder strap and belt. Their hats, of patent leather, are unique. Their gala uniform dates back to the Napoleonic days, with tight, white trousers and a peculiar outgrowth of the tricorne hat.

A unique feature of the Guardia's equipment is that he does not carry handcuffs. Instead, he employs a length of rope with which to tie his prisoners. The Guardias are housed in barracks, where every man has an apartment, and where, if he is married, his wife and family may live with him.

Until quite recent years they were obliged to grow a full beard and a large mustache, and you still hear the phrase «Mustachios like a Guardia civil».

England Launches a Drive for Peace

ONCE again the weary delegates are gathered in Geneva to talk of peace and disarmament. Once again the protagonists of the various plans for curbing offensive strength are rehearsing their well polished and familiar arguments. Once again the world watches, such time as it can spare from more immediate concerns, with a suspicious, doubting eye.

Yet this meeting has an importance which few of its predecessors have had, including that last dramatic session from which Germany withdrew theatrically with a gesture of injured innocence. For in the present conference we shall have an opportunity to observe the representatives of Great Britain in a positively Bismarckian role.

It is a role which the mighty German assumed to end the Russo-Turkish War, and which he himself defined as the role of «honest broker». In those days Germany could adopt the tone of grand indifference, offering, with the assurance that no one could afford to refuse it, mediation of Europe's disputes.

This attitude well becomes England in the present gathering, and her interests are probably no less than were those of Germany in Bismarck's day. Nor can the other powers easily ignore the impartial offer.

The English delegation, fresh from approval by the House of Commons, are in a position to insist on some safeguards for the peace of Europe, which everyone professes to desire. The English mission has been announced as a reconciliation of the German cry for equality in armaments with the French demand for security. They are in a position to press more strongly than before the argument that France's best security is a world devoid of sufficient armaments to make invasion possible.

However, the world is not so simple as it was in 1785. The prospects of delegates returning from Geneva now, as they did from Berlin then, with the device «peace with honour» blazoned on their banners are slim indeed. But then the world expects less now. Peace, even without honour, might be welcomed.

The Sceptics

It is a curious fact that Japan's most peaceful act in many months has been greeted by foreign commentators. In accordance with her promises, Tokio has withdrawn her troops from south of the Great Wall of China, so the suspicious ones say she must be planning to use them elsewhere.

The only place to take them would be to Russia, and incidents of Russo-Japanese antipathies and disputes are being magnified. It is even suggested that the American conversations looking towards a resumption of diplomatic relations with Russia, are designed merely to enable America to deal a shrewd blow at Japan through Moscow.

Fantastic as it sounds, it is believed. Indeed, it finds more credence than the eminently sensible but not very sensational theory that Japan has found troops south of the Great Wall are an expense and a nuisance and are no longer needed, if they ever were.

The Voting Season

It is the season of elections, and the week was notable for the state and municipal balloting in America. The results were definite only in so far as they gave the final blow to prohibition, already doomed, but no one can find in the figures either approval or condemnation of national policy. Since these were not national elections, it is not so surprising.

In New York the voters distinguished themselves by snowing Tammany under by about three to one. Fiorello La Guardia, one of the wild men of New York politics, was elected Mayor by a «fusion» of Republicans and Democrats. The Independent Democrat, McKee, supposed to have the silent benediction of the national administration, was second. Tammany's man was third. The result is claimed to be both a vote of confidence and a rebuke for President Roosevelt. But in reality it has nothing to do with him. It is a vote of confidence in the theory that a sick man rests easier on the other side, and a rebuke for extravagance in city affairs.

Another, even more farcial election, takes place in Germany today. There the electorate will march to the polls to inform Chancellor Hitler whether or not they approve of his regime. The exact purpose of this appeal to the popular voice is not exactly clear. But it is amusing to toy in imagination with the impossible vision of the ballot resulting in a thunderous «No» and the Nazis obediently making way for other men.

In preparation for an enthusiastic vote of «Yes» and in celebration of the tenth anniversary of their party's foundation, the Hitlerites were busy during the week, much too busy to express any considerable interest in the gathering of the arms conference at Geneva. That gathering was on the very anniversary which launched the Hitler movement as the comic revolutionary attempt of the day, a comedy out of which the leaders have forged a grip on Germany the strength of which will be seen when the well drilled majority is announced.

A Banker Looks at the U. S.

WITH patience and confidence on the part of the American people, business in the United States will slowly and gradually lift itself out of the depression into renewed vigor, was the belief expressed this week by Robert B. Gwynn, head of the International Banking Corporation here and president of the American Chamber of Commerce for Spain, who returned with his family to Barcelona recently after a three-month's absence. Mr. Gwynn spent four weeks in New York and Washington where he conferred with banking associates and business men, and consulted government officials about the problems of Spanish-American trade.

The emotional «panic stage» which overcame the American people prior to the bank holiday is now altogether past, Mr. Gwynn said, and it has been replaced by a more hopeful view of the future. Business men, he declared, may disagree about particular measures undertaken by the government but they recognize the underlying principle of NIRA to bring industry into reasonable cooperation and coordination, as excellent, and so they are disposed to follow the government in its experiments.

Bankers, according to Mr. Gwynn, are willing to cooperate «within the limits of conservative banking» although they are not very enthusiastic over many of the government's experiments. They recognize that the leaders are facing many difficulties, «especially the impatience of the people», and they see many of the special measures only as incidents in the government's sincere campaign to help industry recover.

Mr. Gwynn said that it was too difficult to express any opinion over the outcome of the new policies. «Moreover», he said smiling, «the opinion of bankers is hardly held in the same respect as it used to be.» He declined also to predict the course of the dollar in foreign exchange. «It is best put, as a friend of mine used to say», Mr. Gwynn declared, «if it doesn't go up it'll go down, if it doesn't stay where it is.»

Mr. Gwynn asserted that the results of the new principles have been successful in some cases and not so in others. In North Carolina, he said, the textile industry was brought into cooperation after twelve years of bitter strife. The effect appears to be beneficial although retail prices have been increased as much as 50 and 60 per cent. In the coal industry, however, such cooperation still remains to be achieved.

In his interviews about improving Spanish-American trade, the banker said that he found American State Department officials ready to negotiate a trade treaty with Spain. Preference, however, is being given to the completion of treaties with countries whose products do not enter into competition with American goods. As soon as these are completed trade pacts with other nations will be negotiated. While the feeling that Spain is discriminating against some American products is an influence in

Mr. Grimes on the International Mind

The international mind is one that crosses borders and seeks to understand the views of others rather than simply win an argument, according to the Rev. C. H. D. Grimes who spoke on «The International Mind» in the Ateneo Barcelonés Tuesday evening.

Internationalism is not incompatible with patriotism, Mr. Grimes told his audience, and it is not necessary to hate what others possess in order to show pride in your own good things. He said that nationalism was a comparatively new growth which sprang out of «democracy» and asserted that specific national traits were not virtues or defects inherent in a race, but products of climate and geography.

Although history, especially since the French Revolution, shows a distinct trend away from the ideal universal Parliament, toward the establishment of sovereignty for small groups, Mr. Grimes declared that there is now a new counter-current of international action based on the conviction that great problems cannot be solved except by common action.

the attitude of government officials, the major obstacle, according to Mr. Gwynn, appears to be the opposition against reducing tariff. This is being offered by persons in America whose business will be influenced by Spanish imports. Thus, he said, factories engaged in manufacturing cork, peanut oil and cottonseed oil interests oppose the reduction of tariffs on manufactured cork products and olive oil.

The United States evidently plans to use wine imports which will follow the repeal of prohibition as a bargaining point to gain trade concessions from wine-exporting countries, in the opinion of Mr. Gwynn. Yet, he said, even under present duties, Spanish exporters should find the United States a good market for their wares, especially sherry and malaga. He said that other wines would also find a ready market but that Spanish exporters should prepare for it with advertising and propaganda which would spending money.

The Wines of Catalunya

The following letter, elaborating what has already been published in these columns concerning the wines of the country, has been received from one who is an expert in the subject. Señor Santacana's position as head of the wine growers of Catalunya is in itself sufficient to make what he has to say of Catalan wines interesting.

To the Editor :

I have read the «Introduction to a Study of Spanish Wines» in the Spanish Times of October 22nd, but do not think that you did justice to our Catalan wines by mentioning them in one line.

Cataluña possesses a complete range of wines to satisfy the most particular gourmet, especially in white wines as the red do not represent a very high percentage of the total crop in Cataluña. However, there are sufficient red wines to fill any gaps that might be thought to exist.

Among the high class wines with regard to alcoholic degree as well as to quality, the Priorato must be mentioned. This, well blended and treated, is much superior to Sherry and besides more natural; in fact it is one of the wines with the most natural bouquet in the world. I have no doubt that if one day this wine will be properly manufactured and advertised, it will be in the first rank among all generous wines existing. Next to this and nearly in the same class—though it has different conditions of bouquet—should be placed the wine of the higher Priorato region which is produced in the part of that district that borders on France, especially in Espolla and neighbouring villages.

The next in quality and strength are those of the Campo de Tarragona, where vintages from the generous type down to table wines of the highest class, both red and white, are produced. Neither should one omit to mention the Malvasia from Sitges among the generous wines.

As the real type of table wine of excellent quality, Panades should be mentioned. They usually contain from 11 to 12 degrees of alcohol and are of a particular composition that gives them, principally the white, a special flavour and coolness, the characteristics of the real type of good table wines.

A little inferior in degree but very agreeable to the taste are the wines of the Conca de Barbara, both red and white making excellent table wines. Also the Valles wines and those of some other regions share the characteristics of the Panades type to a large degree. In addition they offer a variety of peculiar characteristics that are very much appreciated by the connoisseur.

I left it to the end to speak of the wines from Alella that are produced in the sandy region of the Maresma or the Coast of the Levante. Part of them are made into generous wines, while others are marketed as table wines though of a rather high graduation. There are also the sparkling wines, whose centre of production is San Sadurni de Noya and which are made principally from special grapes called Macabeo and Parellada.

This is an epitome of the various types of Catalan wines without speaking of special brands, numerous and very well known, almost all of them, because I might make the mistake to leave out some thus hurting the feelings of others.

Visitors in Tarragona

A large number of visitors from England and the United States were in Tarragona this week.

The English visitors included Mr. and Mrs. Hayes, Mr. and Mrs. Crebbin, Mr. E. Hope, Mr. and Mrs. Ward, Mr. S. Leigh, Mr. Geoffrey J. A. Dunlop, and Mr. Jules Maystro, all of London; Mr. and Mrs. Bart of Liverpool; and Mr. George Young and family of Cookham.

Among the Americans were Mrs. Irene Borden Butler, Mrs. Mary E. Pringle, and Mrs. Clara Fuster, all from California, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. McCann, Miss Bertha Palliser, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Donnyman, and Mr. Max Zeckner, all of New York.

Britishers Here Will Discuss Threat of Trade Reprisals

The strain on Anglo-Spanish trade relations resulting from alleged tariff discrimination by Spain in favour of French automobiles, reached a climax recently with a demand by the Federation of British Industries that Great Britain take reprisals, especially against Valencia oranges. This will be the principal subject of discussion at a meeting of the Committee of the British Chamber of Commerce for Spain which will be held at their Barcelona quarters, Rambla Estudios, 8, Tuesday evening at 6.15.

The question of preferential treatment which British motor car manufacturers claim is being granted to French competitors in violation of the Anglo-Spanish trade treaty, has become one of extreme importance. Because France imports more than 35 per cent. of Spain's wine she is entitled, by agreement, to claim an equal reduction in motor car duties. She has already taken advantage of this. The Anglo-Spanish treaty, British exporters argue, contains a reciprocal «most favoured nation» clause which gives Great Britain or Spain the same concessions granted by either to any other country. Although London has demanded a similar reduction on British motor cars for several months, it has not been forthcoming.

British importers point out that they buy more than the necessary percentage of Spain's orange crop and this gives them the right to demand a 35 per cent. reduction in automobile duties, which they have not done, preferring to base their claim on the trade treaty provisions. The Federation of British Industries suggests to their government that it strike at once at the importation of Spanish fruits, especially Valencia oranges, the season for which is now beginning.

President Newbery will preside at the Chamber of Commerce meeting. The committee will also make plans for the joint session of the Madrid and Barcelona councils of the Chamber.

Oddments of News

The recipe for acquiring a rich and handsome sweetheart was confided to a servant girl in Barcelona by a gypsy. The first part was a bath in holy water, which would wash away all sin. Then it was necessary to turn over to the gypsy all the girl's money, since lucre is impure and would prevent the damsel's purification. The young woman had a thousand pesetas note, and handed it over. Something went wrong with the working out of the recipe, and now the police are looking for the gypsy.

When Amelia Sanguino died in Barcelona a fortnight ago, her parents, who live in Mallorca, accused her husband and his mother of poisoning her. The doctors found no traces of poison, but the neighbours said maltreatment killed her. When Amelia was gravely ill, they told investigators, her mother-in-law dressed as a ghost and passed by the sick-room while the husband knocked mysteriously on the walls. Amelia, they said, died of the shock.

Husband and mother-in-law are now under arrest. The mother-in-law is in the hospital suffering from nervous prostration. The neighbors bear them malice, the husband says.

American Women Make Plans

The first meeting this season of the American Women's Committee took the form of a luncheon party last Thursday at the home of Mrs. Richard F. Boyce, the wife of the American Consul. There were thirty-two present.

Mrs. Homer Eddy, President of the Committee, presided, and the speaker was Señorita Graciela de V. de la Puente, a member of the Directorate of the Instituto Cerenil Anti-tuberculoso. She explained to her audience the ways and means of charity organizations in Barcelona, for it is one of the aims of the Committee to engage in such work during the year.

However, their immediate programme calls for the presentation of The Sleeping Beauty which will be given by members of the Committee for the children of the colony. The date set for the production is December 16th, and the Studium, one of Barcelona's most attractive intimate theatres, has been engaged for the occasion. Miss E. Parsons is director of the cast, Mrs. Hill costume designer, and Mrs. Bishop is in charge of publicity. Unfortunately, Mrs. Boyce, who has been actively interested in the Committee's activities, will be on her way to Yokohama when the play is presented. Her husband has been transferred to a post in the Japanese city.

A nominating committee was appointed on Thursday, of which Mrs. Daniel Braddock is chairwoman. Election of officers will take place at the next monthly meeting.

About Barcelona

The monthly luncheon meetings of the American Club, suspended since August, were resumed Thursday in the Grill Room of the Hotel Ritz with a large attendance of members and guests.

The speakers were Mr. Robert B. Gwynn, president of the American Chamber of Commerce for Spain, and Mr. A. C. Hobble, technical director of Riegos y Fuerza del Ebro, S. A., both of whom returned recently from visits to the United States. They discussed informally conditions as they found them in America, stressing particularly the spirit of hopefulness which now animated the people and their confidence in President Roosevelt.

Among the guests at the luncheon were Mr. A. H. Staton, European general manager of the Coca-Cola Company; Mr. Michael O. Jenkins, who came with his family to Barcelona recently from France to make his home here; Mr. Lester Clark, salvage officer, of South Africa; Mr. Cavanaugh, and Professor Juan Batiste y Roca, secretary of Palestra.

Course in English Literature

A course in English literature leading to a certificate of English Literature has been established by the University of Barcelona for Spanish and foreign students. The course lectures, some of which will be in Catalan and some in English, will be held daily in the University from 6:30 to 7:30 o'clock, beginning November 20th. The lecturer will be Professor J. Mascaró, M. A. Cantab.

The object of the course, which is specially designed for the large number of students of English in Barcelona, is to create interest in English literature and the virtues of the British people. Required study will be two plays of Shakespeare and selections of Milton and Keats, and the evolution of English poetry and prose will be critically followed with the help of «The Oxford Book of English Verse».

Professor Mascaró is eager to have a number of English residents follow the course to help in the formation of an English atmosphere for the Spanish students. English students will be permitted to write their examination papers in English. An English literary society is planned, and lectures, debates and social events organized, as well as the production of an English play.

Paintings of Mallorca in London

On Dec. 4th an exhibition of paintings, nearly all of them representing Mallorquin scenes and types, will open at the Beaux Arts Galleries in London. The show is the work of Miss Pachita Crespi, a grand-daughter of Dr. Castro who was three times president of Costa Rica.

The young artist recently spent six months in the Balearic Islands, and the canvasses she took to London are the result of her stay. Two, which have already received the praise of English critics, represent a crucifix in a Valldemosa patio and a Mallorquin peasant. Miss Crespi has exhibited twice in Central America and in the Morten and Milch Gageries in New York, but the December show will be her first in England. Her works will remain at the Beaux Arts until Dec. 16th.

Costa's New Guide

Don José Costa, of the Galerías Costa in Palma, has just completed an illustrated guide to Mallorca which contains four hundred unusually beautiful rotogravure illustrations as well as a key map of the city of Palma and sectional detailed maps of the Island. The cover of the book is a reproduction in colours of one of Erwin Hubert's famous paintings of a Mallorquin lass.

The present copies are in Spanish, but the book will be published in English, French and German, each edition complete in itself.

Mail Connections for U. S. A.

The fastest possible mail service from Palma to the United States for the coming week will be provided by the transatlantic ships listed below. The name of the liner and the port from which she sails should be included in the address of all letters and parcels to insure their going by this route.

Sunday, Nov. 12th, mail closes at the Palma postoffice at 1:30 p.m. for the MAURETANIA, Cherbourg, and the ILE DE FRANCE, Havre, both due in New York Nov. 21st.

Monday, Nov. 13th, mail closes at the Palma postoffice at 8 p.m. for the PRESIDENT HARDING, Havre, due in New York Nov. 24th.

Thursday, Nov. 16th, mail closes at the Palma postoffice at 8 p.m. for the EUROPA, Cherbourg, due in New York Nov. 25th.

Saturday, Nov. 18th, mail closes at the Palma postoffice at 8 p.m. for the CHAMPLAIN, Havre, due in New York Nov. 28th.

Sunday, Nov. 19th, mail closes at the Palma postoffice at 1:30 p.m. for the BERENGARIA, Cherbourg, due in New York Nov. 29th.

Every day except Sunday, mail marked for these ships (or for any others, or for the mainland) can be posted at the gangplank of the Barcelona boat up to the moment of sailing at 9 p.m. On Sundays this is impossible since mail leaves Palma for Barcelona by way of Alcudia.

Society of British Subjects Calls First Meeting of Season

The Chairman and the Committee of the Society of British Subjects in the Balearic Islands will be at home to all members of the Organization on St. Andrew's Day—Thursday, November 30th—from 4 to 7 in the afternoon at Calle de Versailles, 1, Porto-Pi. There will be refreshments, bridge and dancing.

Members wishing to attend may obtain invitations on application in writing to the Hon. Secretary, Calle de Portugal, 60, Son Español.

Personal notices have been sent to as many members as possible but because of a large number of change of addresses, the Committee have not been able to communicate with all. Members are, therefore, asked to notify any of their friends who are already associated with the Society or who may wish to join.

The Society was founded in December of last year for the purpose of furthering British interests by encouraging social relations between British residents and temporary visitors, arranging for social events in connection with the visit of the British Fleet or distinguished individuals who may come to this part of the world, and to cooperate with the British Vice-Consul in relieving distressed British subjects.

Membership in the Society is open to all adult subjects of the British Empire, and the Committee reserves the right to require the presentation of a passport. The entrance fee for members is 5 Pesetas, and the annual subscription another five. Visitors may join on payment of not less than 5 Pesetas, and those whose residence in the Islands does not extend over four months at any one time come in that category. There is another form of membership which is designated as Foundation Member. This applies to anyone who joins the Society during 1933, and the fee for that is 5 Pesetas for entrance, and the payment of a lump sum of 25 Pesetas.

Beric's Fashion Show

Beric, latest of the Terreno couturieres to display the new fashions to the Mallorca public, is giving the first of two shows this afternoon at 5:30 in the Círculo Mallorquín. The models will also be shown next Wednesday evening at Victor's Bar, beginning at 9:30 p.m. Beric's speciality is sports costumes, and she has an unusually varied and interesting selection this season.

They Say in Pollensa

The annual dinner of the Pollensa Sailing Club took place Tuesday night at Ca'n Anet. The Vice Commodore, Major Mead, was unable to be present, but Captain Barley, the Commodore, was in his best form. Also present were Mrs. Barley, Mrs. Lorna Barley, Capt. and Mrs. Tatton, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Rose, Mrs. Mead, Miss Diana Mead and of course Commodore and Mrs. Lyons. Other people drifted in to dance later, among them Mr. and Mrs. Duane. Mrs. «Birdie» Duane must have the smallest feet in the Puerto. The hall was amusingly decorated with red and blue pennants.

* * *

Several ladies of the Puerto worked energetically for the sale of poppies on Armistice Day. Mrs. Rose, Mrs. Barley and Mrs. Tatton were especially active. In the morning Victor entertained with a remembrance aperitif at his bar, where there was a gala evening later and the most delectable grog.

* * *

M. Dmitri Tsapline, the Russian sculptor, has left for Barcelona for the exhibition of his work at the Galerias Layetanas, which opened yesterday. Twenty-nine pieces are displayed, and will be at the galleries until the 24th. Even for so well known a man as M. Tsapline, it is a considerable honour to have a one man show in the Catalan capital.

* * *

There are some interesting birds in the Puerto, notably fishing eagles and the kingfishers. In the summer, of course, there is no lack of birds of the gold digging variety.

We are wondering who was the fat man with the walrus moustache who was seen paddling in the sea at 2 a. m. the other morning, and did the blonde know about it?

Harry Fawkes Returns

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Fawkes came back to Palma Friday after a few days in Barcelona, and are planning to leave early next month for the United States. Mr. Fawkes has only just come from New York and says he found it terrible.

Oil and Water

A new salesman sold a shopkeeper in Pamplona this week a barrel of 70 litres of olive oil, payment 105 pesetas down. When drained the barrel poured forth a litre of oil floating on water. The police are seeking the salesman.

OF PERSONAL INTEREST

The Messrs. Walton Blodgett and Rodecick Meade are having a joint show of their paintings in the Terreno Shop, and four of them have already been sold. A good many people drop in out of curiosity aroused by the fact that the artists were two of the famous five prisoners. However, the painter Donald Newhall is enthusiastic in praise of the work of both young men, and Capt. Evan Freer, the English caricaturist, has dropped in several times to see the show.

***

Mr. and Mrs. Eyre Pinckard are sailing for the United States next Friday. They are going direct from Palma to San Francisco on the Italian liner California. Between now and then they will be kept extremely busy with farewell parties and goodbye visits.

***

A party that nearly filled the Turkey Bar was given Tuesday afternoon by Miss Joy Petersen to say goodbye to Mrs. F. Shayler and her daughter, Mary, who left for England after a nine months stay in Palma. The guests included Mrs. Crockwell of Establiments, Mr. and Mrs. Rable, Mrs. and Miss Ramsbottom, Mr. and Mrs. B. Fey, Mrs. Batchelor, Mr. S. Mortimer, Mrs. Doris Cameron, Mr. Henry Schute, and others.

***

The Count and Countess Paul d'Autremont of Paris arrived in Palma Friday for an indeterminate visit.

***

Friends of Mr. Frederick Maggs will be relieved to learn that he has recovered from his illness of last summer. He has returned to the Alfonso, where he spent last season. Mr. and Mrs. Pierce of London are also registered at this hotel, as are Major F. A. Howarth and Mr. Barlow of Liverpool. Miss Newland and Miss Greenway left last week.

The Mediterráneo still continues to be headquarters for the British visitors. Those registered last week include Mr. John Evan, Mr. James Clark, Mr. Adam Updyke from Scotland; Miss Jane Spence and Mr. and Mrs. Enric Searle of London, Mr. and Mrs. Basil Humphrey and Mr. and Mrs. Norman Whitely, as well as Mr. and Mrs. Wladinis Polooroff, who are registered from the United States.

Miss Josephine Winser, a young artist who has already had successful exhibitions of her work in London and in South Africa, has on display a number of pictures at the Galeries Costa. Her work includes both the artistic and commercial as represented by a collection of advertising posters.

Among her group of oil paintings are several portraits which are excellent, especially the one she calls Retrato. The landscapes, numbers 2, 3 and 6, of Valldemosa are very nice in colouring, especially the grey tones which were well worked. Although in some cases Miss Winser is handicapped by too much technique, she has done some particularly nice work in wood cuts. She has already sold a number of her pictures.

On Armistice Day, at the English Tea Room, in Terreno, the Rev. Dr. John de B. Forbes held a memorial service, which was largely attended by the English speaking visitors to Palma. The traditional two minutes silence was maintained at eleven o'clock... a silence which is still far more dramatic than the loudest beat of drums.

Mr. George Copeland arrived Tuesday from Barcelona, where he has been staying several weeks, during which time he gave three concerts over the radio. Mr. Copeland is known throughout the world for his interpretations of Spanish music.

Between the visits of Consular representatives from Barcelona, many Americans find themselves with documents which need official attestation. This may be done by mail. Several Mallorquin notaries are approved by the Consul, and documents may be attested before them for a payment of three to five pesetas, and then forwarded to the American Consul General in Barcelona.

If you have not already registered your passport at the Consulate, it must be forwarded with the papers to be attested, as well as the fee of $2 for the service. A stamped and addressed envelope may be inclosed, which will be registered and mailed with the attested papers, direct to their destination in the States, if there is not sufficient time to send them back to Palma and then on.

Among the notaries in Palma who are approved and credited are Sr. José Socias y Gradoli, Calle

San Cayetano, 1, near the Rialto Theatre, and Sr. Nicassio Pou Ribas, Calle Milagro, 11, above the Banco Hispano Americano.

Some idea of the volume of Mallorca's tourist trade can be obtained from the number of questions which the Fomento del Turismo is called upon to answer. During October, there were 7,875 of them. The inquisitive ones were divided nationally as follows:

Spaniards, 2,327. English, 1,515. Germans, 1,356. French, 1,846. Americans, 592. The rest were scattered among many nations.

The Fomento also reports that in October fifteen cruise liners with 2,882 passengers called at Palma.

Mrs. M. Addington, for cryptic reasons known to her friends in Palma as «Alice», entertained at her home in the Calle Armadams on Armistice Night for Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Davies. Among the guests were the Rev. and Mrs. F. Faustmann, Mrs. Doris Cameron, Sr. Pedro Bonet, Dr. Jaime Rover, Mme. Land and her daughter Nadine and her son Gaston, Dr. Miró and Mr. and Mrs. W. Dean. On the first of the month Mrs. Addington will move to 42, Calle Bonanova in Terreno.
